"It is a great source of satisfaction to learn from Mr. Tahilram that Mr. and Mrs. Pohoomull have enjoyed their stay in Japan so much. I take it for granted also that the business end of Mr. Pohoomull's trip has likewise been successful. Taking these things into consideration, I am sure that Mr. and Mrs. Pohoomull will carry back with them to India the best impressions of this country and the knowledge from first hand information that the Japanese are true friends of the Indians.

"The firm of Pohoomull Brothers has a warm place in the hearts of Yokohama residents, who never forget its leadership in the assistance given by the Indian community during the reconstruction of Yokohama following the Great Earthquake and Fire of 1923.

"Too much stress cannot be placed on the importance of the trade relations between India and Japan. It is the desire of us all that it will continue to grow. Personally, I can see no other possibility, largely because of the fundamental friendship, based upon mutual respect, which exists between the peoples of these two countries. May I also refer to the spiritual bonds which have existed since historic times."

Mr. Pohoomull then addressed the guests, asking their support in the future.

Among those who attended the dinner were Mr. Kiyoshi Nakarai, Governor of Kanagawa Prefecture, Mr. Kusuo Iida, Director of Yokohama Customs House, Mr. Koki Akashi, Harbor Master of The Yokohama Custom s House, Superintendent Kamoshida of Yokohama Central Post Office, Superintendent Otsuka of Yokohama Silk Inspection Office, Mr. Kazue Kanakura, manager of Yusen Kaisha, Mr. Yozo Nomura Editor-in-chief of the Yokohama Boyeki Shimpo, Mr. Roy R. Kihara, branch manager of the Japan Times, prominent financers and leading business men in Yokohama, totalling 200 persons.

Care of Animals Gains In Lands Of British Flag

Societies For Prevention Of Cruelty Reported Making Good Progress

Societies for the prevention of cruelty are making progress in betering the lot of animals living under the British flag in various sections of the Empire.

The Animals in India Welfare Association is now carrying out valuable work in improving the condition of cattle and mules owned and worked by the natives of India. The All-India S. P. C. A. consists of 29 affiliated societies. In the West Indies, the Trinidad Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has effected great improvements in the marketing of fowls, and new accommodation has been provided at the San Fernando fowl market, says the London correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

Large Area Covered

In Africa many problems are being faced, and probably the most arduous task is that of the Tanganyika S. P. C. A., which, under the presidency of A. A. M. Isherwood, Director of Education, has to cover an area as large as France and Spain together and containing 5,000,000 natives, 30,000 Indians and 8000 Europeans.

For 10 years this society has been at work and it has 2000 junior members alone. The natives are now treating the work seriously rather than as a novelty, and they are learning it pays to feed their poultry whereas formerly they gave the birds nothing but water.

Mr. Isherwood says he finds the natives are not deliberately cruel but they treat their animals just casually. With its headquarters at Dar-es-Salaam, the society employs native inspectors who go about the country on bicycles; the Governor, Sir Harold MacMichael, is the patron. At Tanga is a committee composed entirely of Africans, who do very good work.

Ban on Cruel Bits

The Southern Rhodesia S. P. C. A. works among 1,000,000 natives and 50,000 Europeans. The society has suppressed the use of the barbed-wire bit, a most cruel article, and has established humane slaughtering at all the municipalities. It is hoped to affiliate all the S. P. C. A.'s in Southern Rhodesia so that united action will improve the condition of dogs in the towns and increase propaganda funds. A Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is working at Accra, Gold Coast Colony.

Work in South Africa

In South Africa the Cape Town and Johannesburg S. P. C. A.'s have achieved much good under the special problems in the Dominion, chief of which is the heat which renders it most difficult to keep animals in captivity comfortable. The trouble of drought, when thousands of animals die of thirst, is aggravated by farmers keeping far more stock than can possibly survive. There is, too, the problem of the very cheap draught animal which the natives can purchase for little and work till they succumb.

There are 27 individual societies in the Union of South Africa working for the protection of animals, and any new legislation affecting animals passed in England is at once considered with a view to adoption in South Africa. Among recent achievements are the passing of the Humane Slaughter of Animals Bill and the Protection of Wild Birds Act preventing the capture and caging of native birds. A Performing Animal Bill was recently passed.

Yorkshireman Breaks The Bank

Domel

MONTE CARLO.—A Yorkshireman whose home is near Richmond, Yorkshire, has had an exceptional run of luck while playing Trentte-et-Quarante at the International Sporting Club here.

He has converted a capital of £20 into £2,000—in less than half-an-hour's play. This is an exceptional feat, for money takes longer to win it trente-et-quarante than at roulette because it is only possible to stake on the even chances.

Canny

In the dressing room of the train the Scot had been boring everyone with tales of the great deeds he had done.

"Well, now," said an Englishman at last, "suppose you tell us something you can't do, and I'll undertake to do it myself."

"Thank ye," replied the Scot. "I canna pay ma railroad fare."—Toronto Globe.

duction control.

As far as putting into effect the New Deal program, the President scored notable legislative success in his third year in office, but his failure to convince the Supreme Court of the validity of his legislation was just as potable.

In the field of legislation the President suffered two substantial defeats. The Senate rejected his proposal for American adherence to the World Court, and Congress, failing at the spring session to override his veto of the Patman inflationary bonus bill, enacted over his veto this session another bonus bill which provides for payment by orthodox borrowing.

The President's third year was his biggest spending year. The mounting national debt gave him no apparent concern, nor provoked any evidence of a return toward real economy. The President counted on increasing revenues as business improved to balance the budget in the future.

A. A. A. Death Next

The Court decision on January 6 vote, was the second great blow to the New Deal. It ended direct crop killing the A. A. A. by a six to three control, doomed the compulsion principle on the farms, set limits to Federal regulation generally and raised the threat of future invalidation for the Guffey Coat act, parts of the Social Security act and the Wagner Labor Relations act.

The Court decision February 17, upholding by eight to one the first test of developments under the T. V. A. program, brought some return of confidence to the Government, confirmed it in its power plans, temporarily halted incipient agitation for a check on the Court, but left standing two leading questions propounded by the President's third year—has the Court swept away the cards of the New Deal, and is the Administration heading toward a future effort to amend the Constitution or change the Court?

Ireland Recalls Its Patron Saint

Military Parade, Masses For Army And Cabinet Held; Broadcast Interrupted

All over Ireland the national festival was observed on March 17 with traditional religious fervor in the morning and with holiday activities in the afternoon.

Dublin had its customary great military parade, preceded by openair mass for the troops of the Portobello barracks, attended by Minister of Defense Frank Aiken, members of the Army Council and many notables, including United States Minister Alvin Owsley.

The military pageant was followed by the ceremonial of Cabinet members to a high mass at the procathedral.

Service were held in Gaelic in both Catholic and Protestant churches in this city during the morning.

An outstanding feature of this year's festival was its many radio addresses, says the New York Times. For President de Valera, who made several broadcasts, it was a particularly heavy day. His first broadcast was at 8 a. m., when he spoke to Irishmen in Australia. St. Patrick's 1,500-year-old bell, lent by the National Museum, was sounded to introduce the President.

At 11 a.m., Mr. de Valera spoke over the British broadcasting system to England, Scotland and the dominions.

Scarcely had the President begun to speak when his voice faded and a "pirate" announcer was heard, saying, "Hello, comrades. For the past half-hour we have just witnessed a very fine display of British militarism."

Mr. de Valera's entire speech was continually interrupted with references to British imperialism and militarism. Reception in the Irish Free State was interfered with, but not British reception, as the broadcast was taken by land line to England.

Mr. de Valera's final broadcast, made that night, was carried over the Columbia Broadcasting System to the United States. The toll of St. Patrick's bell was sent to American listeners.

Big N.Y. Gang Arsenal Is Uncovered In Raid

eating and, according to the raiders, planning a robbery or some other crime, was filled with rickety wicker furniture. There were no pictures on the walls, and the only cheery note was provided by the gay-colored drapes at the windows. Pulp magazines of crime stories were scattered about the room.

One of the men apparently had been reading "Laughter in Hell," by Jim Tully, and in Peraski's room the detectives found a copy of "I Was Condemned to the Chair," by Edward McGrath. On a dresser in the same room was a nineteeninch statutette of St. Patrick.

While the apartment was not elaborately furnished, the young gangsters had been lavish in the matter of haberdashery and the closets and bureaus were filled with flashy neckties, gaudy socks, light-colored hats and silk shirts and the type of suit best described as "natty."

Autos Believed Stolen

In the garage next to the house two automobiles, believed to have been stolen from owners here and in California, were found. In addition the police said they found a set of stolen license plates and a set of Georgia markers. The detectives said the gang probably never used the same set of license plates for more than one getaway.

The raid on the rooming house, it was said, was carried out after three days of investigating a report that a suspected murderer would be found there. The raiding party consisted of Captain William T. Reynolds of the East Fifty-first Street station, Detective Lieutenant Martin J. Owens and Detectives Frank Crimmins, Charles McGowan, Francis McFarland, James Brady and Bernard Devaney of the same precinct.

The detectives went to the house, knowing they were dealing with desperate criminals and expecting to shoot it out. Inspector Kear, who directed the examination and booking of the prisoners, said it was a miracle that no one was killed. He praised the skill with which the raid was carried out.

Reaching the West Ninetieth Street house shortly after midnight, the detectives waited until they saw a young couple come out. The man looked like one of the suspects but proved to be some one else who, upon establishing his identity, volunteered to help the detectives by opening the iron grilled outer door. Mrs. Tully came to the inner door.

Lieutenant Owens asked the landlady to list the names of her tenants. None of the names she gave corresponded to those of the men for whom the detectives were looking, so they decided to search the house. Pushing Mrs. Tully ahead of them, they started with a room on the first floor. Peraski answered the landlady's knock, shouting:

"Who is it?"

"It's me, Mrs. Tully," the landlady answered.

As the door swung open, the detectives pushed Mrs. Tully into the room, following her with drawn guns. Five men were sitting at a table, eating and talking. They surrendered without making a motion toward the pistols which we almost at their feet. Following the odor of cooking across the hall, Detective McGowan found Mrs. Peraski and Miss Martin frying more ham and eggs.

Policeman Shouts Warning

After a brief questioning of the women the detective sent for Peraski, who upon entering the room made a dash for a window, his right hand extended toward a flapping curtain which blew into the room far enough to disclose an automatic on the sill. McGowan shouted to Crimmins:

"Look out, Frank; he's after a gun!"

Crimmins, wheeling, brought his blackjack down on Peraski's head and the blond, wavy-haired youth dropped unconscious. Upstairs the detectives captured Ryan and Kane. The latter was asleep. Neither of them put up any fight. Two families living in the house, unaware of the identity of its other tennats, were not disturbed by the raiders.

Quesiond about the arsenal found in the house, Peraski first said the weapons were left with him by "a Mr. Thompson," but later he admitted that he bought them "from a couple of soldiers on Fifth Avenue" because he liked to experiment with guns and silencers. The detectives said that Peraski, handy with tools, was the gang's gunsmith as well as its "trigger man."

One of the automobiles found in the garage adjoining the house was said to have been stolen in California. The other was stolen last Sept. 5 from Irving Arlitz of 65 Wadsworth Avenue. Witnesses of bank robberels in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut and several up-State cities, as well as New York City hold-up victims, have been asked to help identify the automobiles and prisoners.

Austrian Regime Decried At Trial

Socialists Accused Of Treason Continue Defiance In Court And Uphold Illegal Work

The trial of thirty Socialists in Vienna accused of high treason because they reorganized in secret the Social Democratic party, which Austrian Fascists shattered in 1933, was marked on March 17 by the continued defiance of the defendants and attacks on the present Fascists regime.

As the trial progresses excitement mounted in the working-class suburbs. Night after night thousands of fervent printed demands for the release of the accused are found scattered in the streets and defiant claims are painted on building walls, according to the New York Times. Elderly Socialists are routed from their beds by the police and forced to sweep up the leaflets and obliterate the inscriptions.

Mass arrests, provoked by fears of demonstrations in favor of the prisoners, continue to such an extent that government newspapers like the Weltblatt admit the two main prisons are overcrowded with "political offenders."

Woman Shouts Defiance

The calm at that days' session of the trial was broken shortly after the opening by a gray-haired woman, who shouted:

"You can stop our mouths, but you'll never break the spirit of the Viennese workers and their determination to regain their liberty."

The police rushed her from the court. The outburst had been occasioned by the judge's refusal to allow Roman Felleis, one of the leading defendants, to make a statement on the character of the present Austrian Government. It later became known that the woman had been reporting the trial for a government Fascist newspaper, but allowed her feelings to get the better of her.

Felleis admitted unreservedly his participation in the Socialist underground movement, and said the sight of prisoners who had been beaten and tortured by the police had been responsible for his affiliating himself with the work.

Firm for Civil Rights

He said the underground movement was not directed against the State but was an opposition party of men holding the same principles as those who in democracies could enter Parliament and even form governments. Socialists in Austria, he asserted, demand the same right to agitate for liberty as was accorded by the government to monarchists to agitate for the destruction of the present regime and the restoration of a King.

Mrs. Marie Emhart, a former City Councilor, who is on trial for her life, refused to plead guilty, saying: "I have done what this regime calls illegal activity, but it is perfectly legal for millions of women in the world's great democracies." She said she had been dragged from bed by Heimwehr agents in the middle of the night and thrown into prison without a warrant and without any charge being made.

Karl Hans Sailer, also on trial for his life, spoke more than two hours. He said that only reorganization of the workers by the underground Socialists had prevented the workers in their bitterness from going over en masse to the Nazis. He criticized the government for its refusal to recognize that only the restoration of full liberties in Austria could create a real barrier against the Nazis.

Despite new appeals, prominent foreign Socialists in the city for the trial still were barred from the court today.

Thief Gives Change

Domei

BALTIMORE, Maryland,—Whem an armed robber entered his drugstore, Robert Lotterio produced $50 in notes of small denominations, all he had in the shop.

The bandit took $12 and handed the rest back.

"Thats all I need" he observed shortly, and walked quickly out of the shop.

Lotterio was so surprised he almost forget to call the police.

French Chamber Ends 4-Year Term

from the gold standard.

Politically this retiring Chamber has followed what has now become an almost usual experience. It began with a big Left majority. Radical Socialists and Socialists had combined to win the elections and Eduard Herriot was Premier. But Mr. Herriot was fighting the Socialists in Lyons and soon the rift began. From the outset the Premier had set himself the task of sareguarding the franc from another collapse, such as he had known in 1926, and his effort and those of his France Minister, Louis Germain-Martin, resulted in a sound franc during the past four years.

Mr. Herriot also deserves credit for the liquidation of the German reparations issue at Lausanne which brought peace one little step nearer or, at least, removed one major cause of friction. But he could not get his own countrymen to follow him in his desire to keep up some form of debt payment to the United States even, though German payments had ended.

There followed a series of Radical Socialist Ministries which were prisoners of the Socialists and at their mercy. They went down like ninepins, and suddenly the Stavisky scandal blew the Left majority of 1932 into fragments.

Gaston Doumergue came in to save the situation, but his ways and ideas were those of an older and more leisurely generation. He wanted to reform the Constitution, but he did not do it quickly enough, and soon he faded back into retirement.

Pierre-Etienne Flandin succeeded him. Here was a new man with new ideas and much ambition. But Mr. Flandin's political course had been devious. There were some contradictions which aroused opposition. When he asked for power to proceed by decree it was refused him. It was refused, too, to Fernand Bouisson and given to Pierre Laval.

During the weeks that followed the advent of that Ministry the country was deluged with decree laws. But somehow they did not seem to produce all the deflation that had been expected and above all they failed to get business running again.

Mr. Laval's foreign policy kept him in office, but slowly and steadily younger Radical Socialists fighting, they claimed, for the defense of League of Nations principles, by uniting with the Socialists and Communists, once more in a common front, managed to scrape together just enough votes to defeat him.

And so this legislature ends as it began, with a Left Premier in Albert Sarraut, with a Left majority and with what is very nearly a Right policy with regard to Germany.

In six weeks' time the new elections will be held and the forecast is that there will be another sweeping Left victory, which will probably disintegrate again and give place to a center government.

Young Gets Medal For Peace Efforts

has made an outstanding non-political contribution to better citizenship and world concord. Without partisanship on any special pleading it is the belief of the society that Owen D. Young, with his long list of achievements in industry, radio, international conciliation, the furthering of human relations at home and abroad, deserves the award and in receiving it is doing credit to the highest honor at the disposal of this society.

In the choice of an exponent of the highest principles underlying international relationships, good government and fair business, in the person of Mr. Young, the Society of Arts and Sciences followed its traditional method of honoring high talent in one of the contrasting fields within its broad area.

The 1934 recipient was Miss Grace Moore for "conspicuous achievement in raising the standard of cinema entertainment." Only one other woman has won the medal, Eva Le Gallienne, for her contribution to drama. Other past recipients include Thomas A. Edison, Cass Gilbert, former Governor Kohler, Albert A. Michelson, Robert A. Millikan and John Philip Sousa.

Objectives of the Society

The Society of Arts and Sciences was founded in 1883 by the English philosopher Herbert Spencer with the following objective: "To encourage and perpetuate the useful and beautiful in arts and sciences; promote the wellbeing of mankind and enlarge the realms of human knowledge; improve social and living conditions through bringing added beauty, comfort and happiness to mankind; increase the knowledge, appreciation and use of the arts and sciences among the people; to bring laurels to the living who have made the world a better place in which to live."

The judges who selected Mr. Young to receive the 1935 laurels were united in their expressions of pleasure at the selection. Senator Glass wrote:

"I do not at this moment know of any American who is better entitled to the honors of the Society of Arts and Sciences or any other society or of the people of the nation than Owen D. Young. It gives me very genuine pleasure to join in approving the proposed honor. The society honors itself in honoring Mr. Young."

Russian Uses 'Canned' Blood In Transfusions

Moscow Doctor Obtains Supply From Victims Of Fatal Accidents

Successful transfusion into living human beings of blood taken from the victims of fatal accidents and kept in a refrigerator for more than three weeks was described recently in "The Journal of the American Medical Association" by the Soviet scientist, Dr. S. S. Yudin, who first developed the procedure. Dr. Yudin, who is chief surgeon of the Sklyfasovsky Institute, the central emergency hospital of Moscow, reported in the article the results of 924 transfusions in his own clinic besides the sending of more than 100 flasks of the blood for use in other hospitals of the Soviet Union, According to the Christian Science Monitor.

American hematologists read the report yesterday with the same cautious interest with which it was published by the official journal of the American Medical Association. No similar experiment, they stated, had ever been attempted on such a scale outside the Soviet Union, and some of its results, they indicated, may prove, after analysis and verification, to have considerable scientific value. Popular repugnance to the idea of such transfusions, they suggested, and the greater availability of living donors in urban centers of the United States, were likely to prevent the new source of blood for medical purposes from being widely used here.

Saved by Quick Transfusions

In the 924 transfusions attempted in Moscow, Dr. Yudin reported, there was no toxic manifestation caused by the blood. Seven of the cases died, he wrote, but in each case because of technical errors in the operation and not because of the blood. In many cases, he said, especially where massive and repeated transfusions were made necessary for operative reasons, the patients were saved by the immediate availability of large amounts of blood of the exact kind required.

"Organization of stations for collection of cadaver blood should offer no difficulties in the larger cities," Dr. Yudin wrote, "particularly in the large hospitals for emergency cases. The supply should come from traffic accidents as well as from the medical service."

The best blood, he reported, had been found to come from the bodies of healthy individuals who died suddenly, in accidents, by drowning, or from heart attack. If the blood had been removed within from six to eight hours after death, he declared, it rapidly coagulated and then, about two hours later, returned to the fluid state and could not coagulate again. Blood obtained from this source, the article pointed out, could be preserved almost a month, in a refrigerator, without the addition of citrate or any other chemical anti-coagulant.

Learned to Choose Sources

"We soon learned," he wrote, "to select the more suitable cadavers, such as those of persons dying in an attack of angina pectoris, those killed by an electric current or those who hanged themselves. From 2 to 3.5 liters of blood can easily be obtained from a cadaver that is not damaged, and that amount will suffice for five or six average transfusions.

"Before long, we had not only enough blood for our own clinic, but we were able to supply it to a number of hospitals and even send it to distant points."

The therapeutic results, he found did not differ from those obtained by transfusion of blood from living donors. The particular advantage, he stated, of the new source of blood was made evident in emergency operations where loss of time entailed in calling a donor and obtaining blood from him might prove fatal. Profound shock developed in the course of a brain operation or an abdominal operation was cited as such an emergency.

Two cases were described in detail in the report. In one, a seventeen-year-old boy, suffering from a deep duodenal ulcer, developed hemorrhages before an operation could be performed. Four transfusions were made, giving the patient 1,100 cubic centimetrs of refrigerated blood.

"He made an uneventful recovery," the report concluded.

Dr. Arthur Coca, editor of "The Journal or Immunology" and medical director of the Blood Transfusion Betterment Association, Inc., said last night that no similar experiments had ever been performed in the United States. He doubted the practicability of the process in the United States because of its repugnance to the minds of many people. Single living donors can nearly always be found, he said, who can give as much as 1,000 to 1,200 cubic centimeters of blood without danger to their health.

A normally healthy individual, he pointed out, weighing 160 pounds, has 5,000 cubic centimeters of blood, or one-nineteenth of his total body weight.

Dr. Lester J. Unger, speaking for the Medical Information Bureau of the New York Academy of Medicine, said last night that the new source might have large value in areas where living donors are not readily available, and for classes of the population to whom the cost of blood transfusions is at present a certain check to their use. Dr. Unger, who is professor of hematology at Columbia University, suggested that the chief scientific value of Dr. Yudin's discovery may prove to be his finding that the blood of accident victims can be preserved from coagulation without the use of citrate or other chemicals.

"It is still too early to estimate its importance," he commented. "From what we now know, the use of blood from living donors is still preferable to the use of cadaver blood. Besides the legal difficulties of using cadavers in the United States, there is a very real psychological objection to be overcome. For hospitals in small communities, a supply of blood which could be kept for several weeks for use in emergencies would have large value.

Will Rogers' Pay Of $324,314 In '34 Films' High

Income Report Shows Janet Gaynor's $252,583 Highest Of Women Stars

Congress and the American public were given a peek into the pay envelopes of film stars and captains of industry on March 21 through a report to the House Ways and Means Committee of corporation salaries of $15,000 or more annually.

The bulky document supplemented a similar salary list filed last January for the 1934 calendar and fiscal year, which only partly satisfied the natural curiosity of man to find out how much money the other fellow makes, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

The popularity of the late Will Rogers was reflected in his $324,314 salary from the Fox Film Corporation, topping all male film stars on the list. Miss Janet Gaynor was the salary leading lady, receiving $252,583 from Fox Films.

The largest salary on the list—$364,432—went to Thomas J. Watson, of New York, head of International Business Machine Corporation.

$23,064.48 for Shirley Temple

That young film star who sent thousands of hopeful mothers with their offspring to the nearest tap-dancing and vocal studios—Shirley Temple—received $23,064.48 from Fox Films. Walter P. Chrysler got $197,568 from the Chrysler Corporation and Alfred P. Sloan jr. $201,693 from General Motors.

Rocket Motor Held Capable Of Making 700 Miles An Hour

Possibility Of People Traveling On Such Ships Believed Yet Remote

Removal of the most stubborn difficulties in the way of rocket aviation was announced recently by the Smithsonian Institution on recept of a report from Dr. Robert H. Goddard of Clark University, but the possibility of people traveling through the outer atmosphere of the earth on such ships was described as too remote for serious consideration, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

Dr. Goddard said that after 15 years of intensive study and experimentation he had developed a rocket motor capable of 700 miles an hour and had worked out a satisfactory method of stabilization to keep the ship on its course.

"Closer to Realization"

Summing up Dr. Goddard's contribution, Smithsonian officials held that the "rocket ship of even the mildest fantasies still is a long way off, but the laborious work of the Clark University physicist has cleared away some of the threshold difficulties and brought whatever possibilities there may be closer to realization."

After repeated tests with various explosive materials to give the motor its propulsive power, Dr. Goddard has found that the best results were obtained with a mixture of liquid oxygen and gasoline. Various experiments on the knotty problem of stabilization showed that the best results were obtained with a small gyroscope which functions in flight. This is held by the physicist to indicate that it would be possible to carry delicate recording instruments, such as would be needed for study of conditions in the outer reaches of the upper atmosphere.

Automatic Recordings

The possibility of making automatic recordings is the chief objective of the rocket experimentation at present. The next practical problem to be studied is the reduction of weight of the rockets themselves, so the motor can propel them faster. The possibility of actually carrying an observer is considered so far off that it has not yet been seriously considered by Dr. Goddard and his co-workers.

The greatest height obtained in any of the flights up to the present is 7500 feet—less than a mile and a half, but it is believed that much greater heights could be obtained if sought. Dr. Goddard wants to dispose of the more fundamental problems of rocket-flying before he tries for distance.

Experiments Go On

In his experiments, Dr. Goddard has had the support of Clark University, of the Smithsonian Institution, of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, and finally of the Guggenheim Foundation which has financed it for three years in a specially constructed laboratory at Roswell, N. M. His work has had the endorsement of a number of leaders of natual science, including Dr. Charles G. Abbot, secretary of the Smithsonian; Dr. John C. Merriam, president of the Carnegie Institution of Washington; and Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, who was instrumental in obtaining the Guggenheim grant for him.

Sixth Set Of Twins

Their sixth set of twins, an eight-pound boy and a six-pound girl, were "doing nicely" in the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Putzer of Oshkosh, Wis., recently. The Putzers have had four children in addition to the twins, says the New York Times. Thirteen of the sixteen are living. The eldest child, 19, is enrolled in the CCC. The father is a WPA worker.

How Many States In The U.S.A.?

Believe It or Not—there are only 44 states in the United States of America, technically speaking. The other 4 are Commonwealths. The Commonwealths are: Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Virginia, and Kentucky.

Cossacks Fete Sudden Return To High Favor

the Kuban region, where only four years ago the fierce opposition to collectivization had won the region the name of "the center of kulak sabotage," and the mountain horsemen from the Terek region all galloped up to the military commander of the district and for the first time in many years proudly made reports as units. Fancy riding, military drills and competitions of horsemanship completed what might be called "the ceremony of the return of the Cossack." All this has had a pleasing touch of spontaneity.

It probably would be a poor guess, however, not to imagine some careful planning behind it. The stubborn fight against collectivization has been lost. Not counting the thousands of Cossacks driven beyond the borders during the civil wars, the nucleus of the old Cossack force has been broken. There was more than mere boasting and lip service in that part of the message sent from the Rostov festival to Stalin which said, "Stalin and the Communist party have reeducated us. He has opened new roads to glory, valor and heroism in the name of the toiling masses. Look at our collectives, our Cossack villages. Our Soviet Don is rich. Not a single bourgeois, not a single capitalist will succeed in putting a foot on our soil."

But the surrender works both ways. Along with the admission of the remaining Cossacks that they have become "Sovietic," the relaxation of official sternness toward them is an admission that the Soviet state needs and wants their aid. So far there has not been any official order readmitting them as separate units. But the Cossack riders at the Rostov display carried the famous curved saber of other days, and Semion Mikhailovich Budenny at the close of the festivities told them they could go ahead and organize on every collective farm the "Voroshilov cavalry units." In fact, it has been the military side of the return of the Cossacks which has received more attention than any other.

The message from Rostov to Stalin said: "We now understand that we must be ready to defend our country, that we shall have to lead our horses to drink at other rivers than the Don, Kuban and the Terek. Let the Japanese generals, Polish and Pan-German Fascists know that Cossack steeds are robust, Cossack sabers are mark." Another exuberantly warlike message to Klementi E. Voroshilov promised him: "When we hear you calling us to battle, we will leap upon our swift horses and destroy the enemy forever."

Mr. and Mrs. M. Komatsu, Mr. H. Imanaka, Mr. K. Tatsumi, Mr. K. Tanaka, Mr. M. Sakurai, Mrs. M. Jenitani, Miss H. Jenitani, Miss M. Jenitani, Mr. K. Yoshida, Mr. T. Sugiyama, Mr. T. Tsuboi, Mr. S. Miyasaka, Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Nott, Mr. S. Tsujitaka, Mrs. F. Kametaka, Mr. Ephim Kasachkoff, Mr. Y. Takayanagi, Mr. M. Fukui, Mr. M. Iwaki, Mr. H. Tanaka, Mr. and Mrs. S. Sasamori, Mr. and Mrs. S. Isobe, Mr. S. Soeda, Mr. T. Nakamura, Mr. C. Aoki, Mr. S. Nakatani, Mr. B. Nishida, Mr. Y. Sogo, Mr. and Mrs. T. Okada.

Mr. Wheeler Dryden, half brother of Charlie Chaplin, and Mr. Percy Marmont.

Noted Screen And Stage Stars Arrive; World Cruiser Damaged

With Mr. Percy Marmont, noted stage and screen actor, Mr. Wheeler Dryden, half-brother of Charlie Chaplin; Mr. H. P. duPont of the fabulously wealthy duPont family, and 315 other around the world tourists, most of them middle aged and wealthy, aboard, the Cunard Star liner S.S Franconia docked at Kobe early Monday morning. She will arrive in Yokobama Friday, the last world girdler to visit in Japan this spring.

The 20,000 ton diner carried a scarred bow and a torn railing on the starboard side, souvenirs of an unwanted meeting with a Chinese freighter, believed to have been the Ching, somewhere off the South China coast on the foggy evening of April 7.

"Beautiful weather," exclaimed Mr. duPont, one of the first passengers spotted by ship reporters. "We have been blessed with beautiful weather wherever we have gone. We have travelled with sunshine as our background." The healthy tan of his face confirmed his statement. Other passengers were loud in their praise of the lovely cherry blossoms they had viewed at Miyajima, first port of call in Japan.

Even more affable was a group of film luminaries of Elsetee and New York, led by Mr. Marmont and Mr. Dryden. They are filming a series of pictures which taken on the Franconia's cruise, in which Mr. Dryden is one of the principal actors under Mr. Marmont's direction.

Pictures are to be named "Old World Stages," "Gangway" and "Travel Talks" respectively and with exception of the later, the films are made in black and white.

Asking in surprise, "How did you know that? Who told you that?" Mr. Dryden admitted to a Japan Times & Mail reporter that he is a half-brother of Charlie Chaplin. He continued that this, his third visit to Japan, reminds him of his younger days when he played at the Yurakuza in Tokyo and the Gayety theater in Yokohama, when he first visited Japan more than 20 years ago as a member of the Howitt-Philips dramatic company.

Asked if he had an opportunity to visit his brother during his trip in the Far East, Mr. Dryden replied that they had enjoyed a reunion in Bangeong. He travelled inland 160 miles from Batavia to dine with Chaplin and Miss Paulette Goddard.

"But I don't like to be called the brother of the famous Charlie," Mr. Dryden protested. "I dont want to capitalize on our relationship."

He is well know among theater goers in New York and is still well remembered as an important player in the original company of the successful play called "White Cargo", filmed with his eldest brother, Sydney Chaplin, a comedy called "A Little Bit of Fluff." He has been a prominent actor in the dramatic worlds of New York and London but his interest in filmdom is more or less incidental.

Equally as colorful is Mr. Percy Marmont, star of many stage and screen plays. Mr. Marmont just finished what he believes will be the most successful British production to date "Secret Agent."

He is probably best known for his work in "The Street of Forgotten Men" and "It Winter Comes" which were well-received in Japan as well as throughout the world.

Mr. Marmont said, "It is very difficult to make a film aboard a cruiser of this sort. The serious part of the picture was the difficulty in catching proper weather conditions and being on the spot for unpremediated humor among the passengers.

"Mr. James A. Fitzpatrick was originally director of the film but he was forced to return to London for urgent business matters during the voyage and I was asked to assume his responsibilities."

Mr. Marmont added that feminine touch in the cast is supplied by three actresses, Miss Daphne Warren-Wilson, Miss Moima Lynd, and Mrs. Paul Bobillard's. The balance of his actors consisted of Messrs. Hugh McDermott and Baenjumin D. Sharpe, actors, Mr. Paul Bobillard sound technician, and Mr. Frank Goodliffe, Cinemaphotographer.

Puerto Rico Is Suffering From Record Drought

While much of the Eastern sections of the United States was flooded late in March the Weather Bureau at San Juan, Puerto Rico, reported the most severe drought since its establishment in 1898. Some parts of the island have had no rain since October," says a report o the New Times on March 27. Crops suffered greatly.

Since Jan. 1 no section has had more than half its normal rainfall, some reporting as low as 35 per cent of normal, continues the report, which adds:

Ponce and other towns have water supplies for only part of each day. In some towns the supply is completely exhausted.

The drought, according to reports here, extends throughout much of the Caribbean area from the Virgin Islands to Cuba. Recently San Juan has been shipping water in ton lots to St. Thomas, V. I., partly to supply the Bluebeards, the government hotel.

Canadian Rails Show Betterment Due to Economies

Operating Revenues Increased By Over $8,000,000 To Net $14,000,000

Through drastic economizing, increasing cooperation with the Canadian Pacific Railways and financial readjusting, added to increased tonnage of freight, the Canadian National Railways' report for 1935 reveals an encouraging improvement over that of the previous year.

Total railway operating revenues increased by over $8,000,000, while the operating expenses rose by only $7,000,000, which brought the net income to over $14,000,000, according to the Ottawa correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

All branches, however, fell far below earnings necessary to meet the interest on the funded debt and taxes, rentals and other cash requirements, and there was a cash deficit of $47,400,000—just a million less than the deficit for 1934.

Increases Tonnage

There was an increase in tonnage on all lines, especially on the Grand Trunk Western, which brought freight revenues up by $7,626,000. On the other hand operating expenses were increased though reducing the pay roll deductions, through increasing the number of employees and through rise in fuel price. An improvement was shown in the operation of the Canadian National hotels. Refunding transactions during the year will affect an annual saving of $2,800,000. The report points out that $5,114,000 of the increase in gross revenues of $8,282,000 was secured in the final quarter of the year, which encourages the trustees to believe that their present methods, added to improved business conditions generally, will bring more marked improvement in the standing of the National Railways during the present year.

To End Duplication

In the meantime every effort is being made to further implement the recommendations of the royal commission of 1931 for closer cooperation with the Canadian Pacific and the elimination of out-throat competition and the abandonment of duplicate and unprofitable branch lines. Over 500 miles of lines have been recommended for abandonment by a joint committee of the two railways and other lines aggregating 1700 miles are still under study, with a view to possible abandonment. One hundred and eighty six miles of line were closed during the year.

The railway is being operated economically and efficiently, declare the trustees, and believe that it is in the public interest that the way out of present difficulties be found in an expansion of earnings rather than by a further curtailment of railway expenditures.

Expect Big Increase

"The indications for additional business are favorable," they report, "and the budget in the railway for 1936 anticipates an increase of $17,000,000 in gross revenue over 1935. The interest charges due to the public will be reduced in 1936 to $49,715,000, largely as a result of refunding operations, and it may be noted this is a reduction of $7,250,000 from the peak reached in 1932.

"The situation contronting the Canadian National Railways is improving but the dominant need continues to be one of rigid economy and careful administration."

Red Snow Falls

In Switzerland, the snow has turned bright red and yellow over a wide area.

At Davos, at Klosters and in the Canton of Tichino, this red and yellow snow has fallen heavily and it now covers the whole landscape for miles.

A meteorological analysis made by the Davos Observatory shows the presence of sand in the snow. It is presumed that this sand must have been blown in huge quantities from the Sahara Desert—a thousand miles away.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Giant Baby

Weight 142 pounds at the age of 3. That's the record of "Baby" Leslie Bowles of Lowestoft, England. Recent body measurements for Leslie are: 49 inches around the waist, 45 inches around the chest and 3 feet, 3 inches tall.

Strangely enough, Leslie's two brothers are both normal in every way, and his parents are actually slightly under-weight. Until the summer of 1935, Leslie was unable to walk, but crawled about actively. He is very forward intellectually, having the mind of a child twice his age, is contented and happy, and greets his visitors at the Pleasure Park, Ramsgate, with a happy smile and breezy conversation.

KYOTO NEWS

A special exhibit of works of Buddhist art of the period of Shotoku Taishi is now being shown at the Asahi building in Osaka. The diaplay includes many national art treasures collected from Horyu-ji, Chukyu-ji, Hoko-ji, Shitenno-ji and other temples built by this famous prince, among which is the well known hanging scroll of Shotoku-Taishi and his two sons. It will be remembered in this connection that because of Umayedo's activity in propagating Buddhism, he founded a national culture: he promulgated a Code of laws in seventeen chapters which he borrowed from China; he published two historical works the "Tennd-ki" and the "koku-ki"; he selected three sutras of the Mahayana doctrine and ordered them to be taught throughout the empire; he was the first to send an embassy to China; and he adopted the Chinese Calendar.

Secret Of Japan's Gains In Industry Asked By Matson

Los Angeles Chamber Of Commerce Official Praises Economic Efficiency

The desire to learn at first hand how Japan had progressed so much in industry was given by Mr. Clarence H. Matson, manager of the foreign commerce and shipping department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce on his arrival in Tokyo on Tuesday from the United States, with the party organized by his body, which is touring the Orient.

The Californian declared that he was acquainted with Japanese efficiency and industry, for which he had great praise, but he added that the country must have an economic philosophy of her own which had done so much in increasing her trade and bettered conditions at home. This subject, he said, he wanted to know more about.

The American party, composed of 27 members will tour Japan, Chosen, Manchoukuo and China. Mr. Matson, who is accompanied by Mrs. Matson, will return in June and spend a month to promote trade between Japan and Los Angeles.

The text of Mr. Matson's statement is as follows:

Statement Issued

It was in the summer of 1931 that I last visited Japan. Since then many things have happened, both in world economics and world politics. In America we have had the most astounding economic depression—something we could not imagine five years ago— together with just as astounding and unbelievable economic remedies and experiments. And much of the rest of the world suffered with us.

"But during these five years I have been watching—at long range, to be sure, but with close interest—the trend of events on the Western side of the pacific. I have noted that Japan has risen to be one of the foremost industrial nations in the world, and that you have sold your goods abroad when other nations did not have even a domestic market.

"I have noted that Japan has kept its people busy. When we in America had fifteen million men out of work, you were having a mild industrial boom. We in America formerly prided ourselves on our ability to develop foreign markets, but our overseas trade dwindled to a fraction of its former proportions, while Japan made increasingly large inroads into the markets of the world.

Tremendous Advance

"This might not have been so surprising were it not for the fact that Japan has to buy practically all of its raw materials, except silk, from some other country. But in the face of this lack, Japan has supplanted Great Britain to a considerable extent in supplying cotton textiles to the world, and most other industrial nations have what we in American call the jitters over the tremendous advance Japan is making in world trade.

"Now I am desirous of learning at first hand how this has been accomplished. Of course I am well acquainted with the efficiency and industry of the Japanese people. We have 42,000 Japanese in Los Angeles County—one-third of all those in mainland America—and many of them are my warm personal friends. So I am well acquainted with Japanese energy and ability.

"But back of this, it seems to me, is a difference in economic philosophy. In former years we in America believed in producing as much as possible of everything we could make or grow, but recently we have adopted the theory that the way to better our condition is to destroy our surplus, cut down our production, and thereby raise prices. And it hasn't served, and won't work.

Creates New Wealth

"Japan, on the other hand, has increased its production of everything for which it could create a demand, and then it has gone into the markets of the world and sold its products at prices the world could afford to pay. In other words, Japan has created new wealth, and thereby kept her people busy when other nations had long breadlines of unemployed. And the creation of new wealth through industry is the only way to prosperity.

"Naturally I have great admiration for the accomplishments of my Japanese friends, and I am glad to see them prosper. At the same time it is my particular task to extend the markets for the products of my own region, if by so doing I can be of service both to buyer and seller.

"However, in my work of trade promotion it is my philosophy that it is poor policy to try to take away markets someone else has developed. Instead it is far better to try to create new markets—new demands and better service.

"It is this policy, I believe, that caused Japan to buy almost as much merchandise through Los Angeles in 1934 as it purchased from New York and San Francisco combined—a fact not generally known.

Increased Shipping

"We have not endeavored to detract from our neighbors in creating new trade. We have simply tried to cooperate with our Japanese friends in building new trade with Japan, and now we have as many steamship callings from Los Angeles to Yokohama in a given time as there are from the next two most important American Pacific ports combined.

"This is due in great measure to the expansion of Japanese shipping, for not only do the two great Japanese lines, the N.Y.K. and the O. S. K., make Los Angeles their most important port of call in America, but the forty or more new motorships comprising what we call the "silk fleets", sail direct between Yokohama and Los Angeles, part of them going on through to New York.

"It is my present purpose to visit Manchoukuo and China, and then return to Japan, when I hope to have the pleasure of spending several weeks in this beautiful country conferring with business leaders."

The Hottest Baby

Eleven-months-old Laurent Mayer, of Sturgeon Falls, Ontario is the hero of an astonishing adventure; he was shut up in a hot oven—and he has escaped alive.

Laurent was sitting in his high-chair in the kitchen of his home. He kicked out suddenly and the chair toppled over.

The baby dropped on to the hot oven and slid right in. The jar caused the oven door to shut fast behind him. The father heard the noise, rushed into the room and rescued his child in the nick of time. Laurent was only slightly "cooked" and is now none the worse for his experience.

South American Rotarians Stress Peace Promotion

Paul Harris, Founder Of Organization, Is Greeted At Parley At Valparaiso

Rotary's important role in the promotion of international peace was emphasized in the recent Ibero-American conference of Valparaiso, the first of many such gatherings to be held at stated intervals throughout North and South America, the idea being, as declared by Joaquin Lepeley, who presided, to bring men of good will, ripe experience and real influence together in an atmosphere of comradeship, enterprise and determination to make manifest the brotherhood of mankind, according to the Christian Science Monitor's correspondent.

The invitation extended to Rotarians all over the continent to participate in this concentration of good will was worthily answered and delegations arrived from many countries of Latin America, among the Argentina, Brazil, Cuba, Central America, Mexico, Peru, Ecuador and Uruguay, animated with a single spirit, that of meeting their fellow members in Chile, or respectfully and affectionately greeting their founder, Paul Harris, president emeritus of International Rotary, and of taking counsel together in the interests of their institution, which, it was especially pointed out, meant in the interests of international peace, understanding and co-operation.

Speeches Are Optimistic

Most of the speeches were optimistic, despite the international clouds, and consolation was drawn from the knowledge that never have the force that make for peace and better international relationships been more active or better organized than they are at present. Called by many different names, professing many different purposes, it was recognized that one and all, including Rotary, had a single object before them, the insuring of world peace.

Foreign Minister Miguel Cruchaga, speaking in the name of President Alessandri, extended a cordial welcome to all delegates and referred to Rotary as an example showing how it was possible to reconcile patriotism with internationalism.

Mr. Harris, replying to the welcome given to him and Mrs. Harris, said that when he left the United States he had the great ambition of being an ambassador of good will to South America. After enjoying Chilean hospitality he felt that he could be the ambassador of South America to the United States.

Way Shown by Rotary

Rotary pointed out the way. Its dearest ideal, he said, was that of a world in which distance and physical features raised no obstacles to good neighborly relations, and inspired by this ideal the Rotarians of the United States extended the hand of fellowship to their comrades in the south.

Sir Norman Angell, he said, believed that good will between the peoples depended on mutual understanding and appreciation. This was not a mere generalization but a fact that could be proved. Diplomacy, commerce and intellectual and spiritual co-operation were the three roads open toward this mutual understanding. None of these was sufficient in itself, all had their limitations, but by following all three together great results could be obtained.

World peace was the great ideal of the Rotary movement, which took the lead in promoting good understanding between the peoples.

Not a Final Resort

But Rotary was not a means that could be appealed to at the last moment to prevent war. Its pacific work must be put in hand before war was thought of. He referred with admiration to the work already accomplished along this road by the Pan American Union and declared that Rotary was also one of the growing forces of the New World.

Four committees were appointed, three of which dealt with internal organization, professional relations and community service, respectively. The fourth committee, which dealt with international relationships, submitted the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

(1) Recommend all Ibero-American clubs to devote part of their activities to the study of problems which offer facilities for drawing their countries closer together and to give preferential attention on their programs to the task of fortifying sentiments of Ibero-American unity and friendship.

(2) Recommend all clubs to make a special celebration of "Goodwill Week" as a tribute to the campaign for international understanding.

For Intimate Union

(3) Recommend all to work for a more intimate union between their nations and for the ideal of an Ibero-American union, demanded by their common origin and destiny.

(4) Recommend all Ibero-Ameriman district governors to foment a greater intercorrespondence and arrange more meetings, and also see that topics of international relations figure prominently for club discussion.

(5) Recommend the adoption of an Ibero-American history competition and solicit the co-operation of the International Rotary directorate and its international relations committee to prepare the conditions as soon as possible.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - - - by Ripley

Duce 'Not Known Here' To Ethiopian Postoffice

"Not known here" is what Ethiopian postal authorities wrote across a bunch of envelopes addressed to "Signor Mussolini, Addis Ababa," recently.

The letters apparently were written by Italians under the impression that Il Duce's troops had reached the Ethiopian capital, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Mothers of Italian soldiers wrote to express admiration for their sons' "wonderful march from Eritrea" and gratitude that the war was "almost over."

One Italian, hazy on geography, wrote that the "10,000-mile trek across Africa must have been terribly fatiguing."

Another letter expressed surprise that "the Italian Army should have taken so long to reach Addis Ababa because the poor, oppressed Ethiopians surely were only too glad to help the civilized invaders in their work of liberating slaves."

Dr. Butler Criticizes Borah And Landon

Idaho and Governor Landon of Kansas. The older Republicans say generally that under no circumstances would they vote for Senator Borah even if he were nominated. They told me that he had bolted McKinley in 1896 and had supported Bryan on the Free Silver issue, and pointed to the fact that he had uniformly supported every unsound monetary policy which had been brought forward from that day to this.

"They also pointed to the fact that he had endorsed the new racket known as the Townsend Plan, which is about the most stupendous economic fallacy that has yet been brought forward. They also pointed to the fact that Borah had uniformly opposed, despite the platform declarations of the Republican party, to which he professes to belong, those international policies by which alone war can be prevented.

"Governor Landon's strength rests, I am told, upon the fact that he is largely unknown. Nevertheless, there has developed, particularly in California, very strong opposition to his candidacy, because of the fact that he is the wholehearted choice of William Randolph Hearst.

"At least a dozen different men and women expressed the hope that it might still be possible to draft former Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois and make him the Republican nominee. They pointed to his years of experience, to his well-established reputation and statesmanlike qualities, and in particular to his knowledge of the agricultural problem which is, of all our domestic problems, the most pressing and perhaps the most difficult.

"The impression which I obtained is very clear. It is that if the Republican party hopes to elect a President in 1936 it must find a candidate of much higher intellectual and statesmanlike qualifications than any of those now being talked of."

Singapore Base To Cost Nine Million Pounds

stores, basins, and smaller docks and quays. It will eventually be possible to re-equip even the biggest battleship afloat, but at present the base is used for minor repairs to the ships of the China squadron and as a center for naval exercises in the China Sea.

The Singapore public is well informed about the R.A.F. activities, chiefly because Air-Commodore Sydney Smith, who commands the R.A.F. in the Far East, has evidently thought it wise to secure public cooperation in the development of that side of the island's defences which, it is said, will soon challenge in importance even the naval activities.

The Selefar air base has frequently been open to the public, who are now familiar with the strategic responsibilities of the flying-boat reconnaissance squadron and of the torpedo bombing machines, which complete the R. A. F. establishment. Two additional Service aerodromes are being built on the island, and a civil aerodrome with accommodation for flying-boats is also nearing completion, so that within eighteen months Singapore island, which is no bigger than the Isle of Wight, will have four modern aerodromes.

At the moment the Army is numerically much stronger than the R. A. F. and the Royal Navy together, and the War Office occupies almost 2,000 acres, all of Blakang Mati, and Tekong, three islands, covering the main entrances to Singapore.

The increased Service population which military development has brought has created its own problems. The Malayan peninsula is unsuited for troop movements, and training has to be restricted, so that the British soldier stationed here has a comparatively easy time, and the problem is to keep him amused and out of mischief. The Union Jack Club is to be enlarged and cinemas provided for the troops.

'Hindenburg' Held To Be Truthfully A 'Flying Hotel'

New Airship Has Four Times As Much Space In Hull As Graf Zeppelin

Those who have watched the new German dirigible, the Hindenburg, under the name of "LZ 129," gradually change from a shapeless hulk into a trim, taut vessel, cleaving the air with its long, slim form, are overwhelmed with the marvels of technical construction evident in this new craft, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

The improvement over former airships is particularly noticeable in the matter of accommodation for passengers. To travel on the "Graf Zeppelin" involved being cramped for space in gondola slung under the prow, but in the "Hindenburg," the passenger can truthfully declare that he is in a "flying hotel."

Personal comfort was sacrificed in earlier airships for speed, but now there is both improved comfort and increased speed. The passengers have four times as much space in the hull of the "Hindenburg" as they had in the "Graf Zeppelin" gondola!

Last Word in Comfort

From the moment the passenger climbs the gangway and makes his way to one of the 25 double-berth cabins, he realizes that here is the last word in comfort commensurate with airship requirements. Each of these cabins is a little wider than the "sleeper" on an European express and has hot and cold water and all other up-to-date comforts. The possible criticism that they are all inside cabins is answered by the fact that a special ventilation system prevents any stuffiness.

In the center of the airship, two decks for the special use of passengers have been provided. On the top deck are a restaurant with accommodation for the full complement of 50 passengers, a lounge, and a combined writing-and-reading room, a long promenade deck and a bar. On the lower deck, are baths and shower-baths and an electric kitchen from which rolls, fresh and piping hot, will emerge each morning for breakfast, for instance.

Decoration Attractive

Careful room-planning, as well as skillful choice of artistically designed mural decorations and "feather-weight" furniture have made such improvements possible. The choice of light-colored wall "papers" (linen, in reality) carrying special painted designs and much to the feeling of spaciousness. The chairs and tables look (and are) most secure, but had one not already proved this fact to one's own personal satisfaction, it would be hard to realize. For these objects of duralumin and canvas are exceptionally light in weight.

One novel method of warming the rooms is by means of the hollow center legs of the tables through which hot air is passed.

Some idea of the size of the "Hindenburg" may be realized from the fact that its hull is roughly the size of the Bremen or the Europa, while its dining room occupies about the same space as a stateroom suite on one of these German liners.

Cut to Measure

The work of building the hull might well be compared to that of making a suit to measure. No finer, more exact tailoring was ever demanded than in the case of sewing the canvas of an airship. The outer covering of cotton has had to be carefully sewn over the duraluminium framework—so precisely that every inch of the stuff was accurately measured beforehand. And then for greater protection against sun and weather, this covering has been treated with a varnish mixture of cellulose and aluminium. The experience with similar covering for the Graf Zeppelin has proved its durability; today, after eight years' wear and tear, nearly 40 per cent of the original cotton covering is still being used.

Mechanical Improvements

A new feature in the construction of the Hindenburg is a large keel under the tail, which it is hoped will still further increase the extraordinary stability of the airship. Another improvement is the fixing to the fore end of this keel of a large pneumatic wheel, which is expected to absorb practically all the shock of the first contact on landing.

Of the four-motor gondolas by which the Hindenburg is propelled only one will carry any personnel. This is a small gondola under the prow for the officer in charge and the operating crew. Each of the other three gondolas is connected with the airship by a narrow gangway down which a machinist can climb during the flight.

One of the most noticeable improvements over previous airships, is the comparative noiselessness of the engines and the consequent reduction in vibration in travel, which adds considerably to the comfort of the passengers.

Awaited in Rio

In Rio, although the regular trips of the "Graf Zeppelin" have accustomed its inhabitants to the sight of airships, the arrival of the new airleviathan will also mark a special event—the official opening of the immense new airship hangar.

The Hindenberg has a cruising speed of 81 miles per hour, as compared with 72 of the Graf Zeppelin, and this increase together with the necessity for refuelling at Pernambuco, through the use of Diesel engines run on crude (nonexplosive) oil, will enable the trip to be done in 80 to 83 hours and the return journey in about 100 hours.

This new airship is intended for the South American route, and together with the Graf Zeppelin, it is planned to maintain a 14-day service. But on May 5 or 6, according to present reports, the Hindenburg will make a trip to Lakehurst, N. J. This will be a kind of study trip, according to Dr. Eckener, since there is much in connection with weather conditions over the North Atlantic which has yet to be known, before a regular airship service can be established there.

Passing through the hangar after the Hindenburg had disappeared one noticed that work had already been begun on a new airship, L Z 130. This is to be an exact replica of the Hindenburg, but will cost only half the latter, that is, RM 4,000,000 ($1,600,000 at $2.50) instead of RM 8,000,000.

When that is finished, then the L Z 131 will begin to appear. This, according to Dr. Eckener, will probably be a smaller but faster airship than its two predecessors.

No stronger proof of Germany's faith in airships is necessary than the mere statement of these plans and a reference to the great airplane-airship harbor which has been constructed near Frankfurt-on-Main. A mention of this latter fact during a visit to Friedrichshafen bought forth a flood of regrets from many local people watching the Hindenburg speeding on its way. For what is Frankfurt's gain is Friedrichshafen's loss.

Rain Like Blood

Red rain, described by witnesses as "just like blood," has fallen in a village near Darbhanga, Hihar and Orissa Province, India.

The rain fell over an area of several acres, covering the ground with big red spots.

No explanation of this phenomenon has yet been put forward and the superstitious villagers fear it foretells calamity.

9,000,000 Seeking Work

Domei

WASHINGTON—Nearly 9,000,000 people are seeking work in the United States through Government employment agencies.

A Labour Department survey states that on January 1st 1936, 8,954,047 persons were seeking work by this means. This represented an increase of 2,241,000 since June 30 last, owing to an order made since that date directing all employable persons in families receiving relief to register with the employment service.

The January 1st total, however, included 3,500,000 persons holding Work Relief jobs, the primary aim of the employment agencies being to place people in work with private enterprises, irrespective of whether they are actually employed on Government relief or not.

Gaoled By Meteor!

A falling meteor has pushed Alois Freidberger, a carpenter, into prison at Augsburg, Bavaria.

He was coming home late at night when the meteor fell with a roar and a flash and buried itself in the ground not 20 feet from him.

Stunned and frightened, Friedberger called for help.

Neighbors thought he was drunk and called the police.

He was put in a cell. Next morning, however, investigation proved that Friedberger's story was correct. The meteor, about the size of a man's fist, was discovered buried in the ground. It was composed almost entirely of iron and was still warm.

Friedberger was at once released—with apologies.

U.S.-British Parity Issue Held At End

ence broke up.

Four years later they tried again to reach an understanding. Admiral William V. Pratt, then Chief of Operations, had adopted a more conciliatory attitude in which the younger element in the navy concurred. But Admiral Hilary P. Jones, chairman of the General Board, was so outraged at the limitation accepted on heavy cruisers that he resigned from the delegation and returned to Washington to wage a strenuous campaign against ratification of the treaty. To him it was a betrayal of American interests and a base surrender to England.

Complete Change in Attitude

In Admiral Standley the change in naval attitude is complete. When analyzing future American needs, he looks toward the far Pacific, and not toward England. Just as British officials have insisted of late that American naval strength is no longer taken into consideration in estimating British needs, Admiral Standley holds that Anglo-American parity is an abstract and desirable formula, but one which need not be interpreted arbitrarily in terms of ships.

He goes even further, and concedes that England does have certain peculiar needs resulting from her far-flung empire which the United States does not have. He insists that British cruiser superiority would not violate the fundamental of parity, since the British cruiser fleet would of necessity be more widely dispersed. Therefore the United States could have effective parity even though inferior in cruiser numbers.

Favors Light Cruisers

Coincident with the transformation in the navy's attitude toward England which springs from a far reaching diplomatic understanding is also a marked change in its policy on the size of cruisers. At the time of both the Geneva and the first London naval conference prevailing opinion in the American Navy demanded large 10,000-ton cruisers carrying eight-inch guns. The agreement at the 1931 conference to limit the number of such ships and put cruiser tonnage into lighter cruisers was bitterly opposed by the older admirals.

Yesterday Admiral Standley characterized these large cruisers as "pocket battleships," said they were all very well for certain purposes, but that the Navy now has a very real need for the lighter type for operation with the fleet. He said the big cruiser is of far less value with the fleet than the light, an opinion which would have been construed almost as treason by the Navy high command of 10 years ago.

Criticized by Stirling

The emphasis he laid on this point of the small cruiser was evidently an answer to Admiral Yates Stirling, retired, who criticized the treaty severely for the six-year holiday in big cruisers. Reflecting the attitude of the older naval generation, Admiral Stirling had insisted that only the big cruisers meet American needs. Admiral Standley had no patience with this point of view, explaining repeatedly that the navy now has all the big cruisers it will need for 10 or 15 years, but that it is badly in need of light.

It was in connection with this that he revealed his intent to recommend to Congress a new program of light cruiser construction, a move which incidentally marks the first official step here for naval expansion beyond the limits of the expiring treaty. Under the existing program the navy will reach the old treaty limits in cruisers by the middle of 1939. At that time it will have a total of 37 cruisers, of which only 10 will be so-called light cruisers. The other 27 will all be in the neighborhood of 10,000 tons in size.

Total Fleet of 50

The Admiral feels that when the current program is completed Congress should authorize a new cruiser program calling for three or four ships a year until the cruiser total reaches approximately 50. He wants these ships to be very small, possibly as small as 600 tons, and designed primarily to ward off a destroyer attack on the battle fleet.

The net effect of this expression of official naval opinion is one more outward bit of evidence of the understanding between the two nations, particularly over naval matters and in regard to the Far East, which has been developing gradually during recent years and finally attained full recognition during the recent naval deliberations in London.

There is in no sense a formal naval agreement, but there is a full recognition that British and American interests are mutual in most respects. The latent suspicion between the professional navies of the two countries is almost entirely eliminated. The pendulum has swung far since 1927.

Changes In Monetary Situation Are Predicted

be utilized on a large scale as effective means of payment, an inflation would at once set in and the franc would definitively fall below its present gold parity. It is thus all too probable that the next startling change in the monetary sphere will proceed from France. But even in that case American monetary policy will be of essential importance for further developments.

An inflation in America could not fail to affect the currency position in England. In that country too everything is prepared for a price advance. The country is well provided with means of payment, which could be better utilized than is the case at present.

The official financial policy, as formulated at the London conference and in the program of the sterling bloc, aims at a moderate price advance, which must be considered desirable also from the point of view of the combating the unemployment. If such a rise of prices could be attained in harmony with the trend of development in the United States, this would no doubt be viewed with favor in England. The conditions in Sweden are similar, and indeed the sterling bloc in general would gladly join in a moderate price advance promoted by England and the United States jointly.

Expanded World Economy

Such a rise of prices would also entail an expansion in the world economy at large. The only danger is that the price advance which now seems to be impending is being pushed forward by forces from which no moderation can be expected. It will be a very difficult task to maintain control over a movement of prices which might show favorable effects at the outset, but which might have the most alarming consequences in the sequel.

If, under such conditions, an armaments race and war are thrown into the scale of those impelling forces which have previously been tending to force on an inflation, there will be an imminent danger that developments in the monetary field may pass beyond control. What the world will then have to rely on is in the first place, an independent and well-balanced management of British currency policy, which will make it possible for the entire sterling bloc to adhere firmly and unitedly to a rational currency program.

'Winterset' Wins Award Of Critics

Anderson's Poetic Play Voted Best Of Season By Newly Organized Circle

"Winterset," Maxwell Anderson's poetic play—the theme of which had been suggested by the Sacco-Vanzetti case—won on March 26 the first annual prize awarded by the New York Drama Critics Circle.

Of the seventeen newspaper and magazine writers entitled to choose the season's best drama, fourteen ultimately agreed on the winner's superior merit, according to the New York Times. Several ballots were taken before the other finalist—said to have been "Idiot's Delight", by Robert E. Sherwood—became the semi-official runner-up.

The prize is a silver plaque depicting a scene of the old John Street Theater, designed by Henry Varnum Poor. It was given formally to Mr. Anderson on the stage of the National Theater in Washington on April 3. "Winterset," now in Philadelphia on a tour, moves to the capital on Monday. Members of the Circle, Guthrie McClintic, the play's director and producer, and others will go down to take part in the ceremony.

The award carries the following citation:

"The Circle's decision is based on the conviction that in 'Winterset' the author accomplished the notably difficult task of interpreting a valid and challenging contemporary theme dealing with the pursuit of human justice in terms of unusual poetic force, realizing a drama of rich meaning and combining high literary distinction with compelling theatrical effect.

Points to "Courage and Wisdom"

"While this award is primarily to the play and its author, the Circle feels that, since the production of 'Winterset' so admirably projected Mr. Anderson's conception, special appreciation must also be expressed to Guthrie McClintic, the producer and director, to Jo Mielziner, the designer, and to the members of the cast. Courage and wisdom were clearly required in both the writing and presenting of 'Winterset'—and the Circle thinks it is a proof of the vitality and dignity of the New York theater that his play was produced and so widely appreciated."

Mr. Anderson's capture of the critics' prize completes a cycle that began two years ago. At that time the drama judges for the Pulitzer Prize committee agreed unanimously that Mr. Anderson's "Mary of Scotland" had been the season's best offering. The general Pulitzer committee thereupon over-ruled its own judges and gave the award to "Men in White."

Last year, Mr. Anderson's "Valley Forge" was prominently mentioned for the season's prize, which ultimately went to "The Old Maid." The city's drama critics, discouraged by the last two awards, then decided to get together and give their own prize.

The meeting at which "Winterset" was chosen took place at the Algonquin Hotel. At first, five plays were under discussion—"Winterset"; "Idiot's Delight," which had opened just the evening before; "Dead End," by Sidney Kingsley; "First Lady," by Katharine Dayton and George S. Kaufman and "End of Summer," by S. N. Behrman. One by one, advocates of other plays switched their votes until Mr. Anderson's had fourteen. It had been agreed in advance that thirteen provided the necessary majority; anything less than that would bring no decision.

Line-Up of the Critics

Of the seventeen, the following voted for "Winterset": Kelley Allen, Brooks Atkinson, Robert Benchley, Whitney Bolton, John Mason Brown, Rowland Field, Gilbert Gabriel, Joseph Wood Krutch, Richard Lockridge, Burns Mantle, George Jean Nathan, Arthur Pollock, Walter Winchell and Stark Young. The following voted for other plays: John Anderson, Percy Hammond and Robert Garland. Under the by-laws of the Circle, the dissenters are not prohibited from writing minority opinions.

Mr. Anderson entered the theater by way of school teaching and newspaper work. His first play was "The White Desert," in 1923. After that came "The Feud," the famous "What Price Glory?" which he wrote with Laurence Stallings; "Outside Looking In," "First Flight" and "The Buccaneer," both with Mr. Stallings; "Forfeits," "Saturday's Children," "Gods of the Lightning" (this also was about the Sacco-Vanzetti case, and was written in collaboration with Harold Hicherson);; "Gypsy," "Elizabeth the Queen," "Night Over Chaos," "Both Your Houses" (which won the Pulitzer Prize in 1933), "Many of Scotland," "Valley Forge" and "Winterset."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

A City Covering 1½ Million Square Miles

Speiding at the rate of 141 miles an hour, the China Clipper took 9 hours and 45 minutes to fly over the city of Honolulu.

The city of Honolulu extends from Hawaii proper to Midway Island, 1332 miles away, while its southern limit is 1100 miles distant. This gives the city of Honolulu an area of about 1 million square miles, making it the most extensive city in the world.

Try 'The Human Touch,' Selfridge Advises Stores

H. Gordon Selfridge, American-born head of England's greatest mercantile house, thinks American business men lack the "human touch."

"I told them, on my last visit to the United States, that they were making a mistake not to come over here more often and see what we are doing," he said, at London, England, recently, according to the New York Herald Tribune. "One of my pet ideas is to make a great store a place where the people are welcome to come and pass the day without spending a cent.

"Take a day like yesterday"—a typical winter day of freezing temperatures and heavy fog—"thousands of people came in just to get out of the cold, and they stayed for hours.

"No clerks worried them to buy something. On the contrary, we had almost a whole floor turned over to a big exhibit, as we do every winter, where they can roam around and enjoy themselves. It costs nothing."

Selfridge, now seventy-two, was formerly a partner in Marshall Field & Co., Chicago. He came to London thirty years ago to found the largest department store on this side of the Atlantic. He still retains his American citizenship.

Social and Personal Notes

SCHOOL PLAY

Effort has been made to make "Quality Street," a James Barrie play which the senior class of the American School will present Friday evening at the school auditorium, historically accurate.

Mrs. Edwin L. Neville has been kind in loaning furniture. Mrs. Paul S. Mayer also has lent chairs to complete the Napoleonic setting. The P. T. A. through the cooperation of Mrs. Robert Corbin, have provided for the curtain in the "Blue Room" of the special set which has been constructed for the scene of the action. Art classes of the school have painted drops and a large production personnel have labored in putting the stage in shape. Invaluble in making the production colorful are the costumes and uniforms. The girl's dresses have been designed by Miss Adrienne Moore, who has drawn upon her experience in college dramatics and study in art schools to make faithful and interesting reproductions of nineteenth century attire.

The cast includes Eleanor Strok as Phoebe, and Nancy Whittemore as her sister Susan Throssel. Susan has the longest part in the play and furnishes the homey atmosphere against which Phoebe shines. Dan Holton takes the part of Valentine Brown, and Elizabeth Iglehart that of Patty, the Irish maid. Betty Stoudt and Alice McKnight are the Misses Willoughby, and Mary Yamaguchi, Mariell Kaelin, John Holtom and Brian Lloyd as couples at the Ball in honor of Waterloo. William Fisher plays the part of a recruiting sergeant. Others are Jean Mayer, Bill Amos, Kenneth Lamott, Barbara Curtis, Jean Jorgensen, Florence Mayer, Richard Rolfe, Richard Neville, and Alfred Bell.

The drama is in four acts, the first being in the living room of Phoebe Throssel during the progress of Napoleon's conquest of continental Europe. The second comes almost ten years later as the war concludes and the soldiers begin returning home. A Dress ball two weeks later is the gay scene of the third act, and the denoement takes place in Miss Phoebe's Blue Room again, two days after.

"Quality Street" has been coached by Miss Moore. Settings have been arranged by Herbert Wilson and Warren Muenzenmeyer assisted by Victor Takata and David Foote. Joe Stoudt has headed a student ticket and publicity committee.

THEATER PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. I. Yasuda entertained at a theater party Wednesday evening. Their guests included Baron Mitsui, Mrs. Tango, Mrs. Hatai, Miss Ritsuko Mori, and Miss Shinako Terashima.

Mr. Yuzuru Matsutani will play the piano accompaniment. Miss Aiko Saso, noted violinist, will also appear on the program and will play several solos with a piano accompaniment by Miss Fumiko Hijikata. The tickets will be obtainable at the entrance of the auditorium.

TO SAIL MAY 5

Mr. S. Stephens, staff member of the Rising Sun Petroleum Company, Yokohama, is leaving for England on a six months vacation aboard the Canadian Pacific Steamship Liner, Empress of Japan, which is scheduled to sail on May 5. He expects to return about the middle of November.

TO TOUR EUROPE

The farewell dance recital of Miss Chiyo Tazawa will be held at the Nippon Seinenkai Hall, Aoyama, at 5:30 p.m. on May 12. Miss Tazawa, a well known dancer, will leave Japan for a dancing tour of Europe shortly.

At the recital she will give several new dances with her pupils and Mr. Toshisaburo Wakayagi, equally wellknown dancer, and Mr. Forest

Miss Chiyo Tazawa

Garent, American dancer.

Miss Tazawa studied piano at the branch school of the Tokyo Academy of Music, then entered the Bunka Gakuin College, Kanda. She studied western dances under the direction of Mr. Koscak Yamada, and vocal music under Miss Ayako Ogino. After she was graduated from the college, she continued her study under several noted dancers. In 1930, she was appointed instructor of dance in the college. Since 1931, she studied stage dancing under Mr. Garnet.

She established the Tazawa Dance Studio in Tokyo sometime ago and has been giving lessons to many pupils.

Clinic Presents Stutterers' And Lispers' Recital

Children's Dictopia Club Of City College Stages A Program For Phoneticists

The Dictopia Club, twenty-five children from five to eighteen years old who suffer from stuttering, stammering, lisping and other speech defects such as lalling and splastic speech, met recently morning at the College of the City of New York, for its regular weekly session. The doors, however, were thrown open for the first time to a few invited phoneticists and speech experts to demonstrate the corrective work done by the speech clinic of the college's school of education.

The meeting was conducted entirely by the students. After the minutes had been read, an importunate resolution from the floor suggested a hike in the country for the next meeting was taken up. For two hours, then, the club proceeded to present songs, playlets, radio auditions, games and recitations in which dropped consonants and vowels that got lost in the palate were unnoticed by the children and by the specialists who had come prepared to tabulate them, says the New York Herald Tribune, whose article continues:

Most of the children, Dr. James F. Bender, instructor in speech correction at the College of the City of New York, explained, were stutterers or stammerers sent by the principals of New York City public schools for treatment in the clinic. But others, he said, were subject to lalling, a kind of infantile speech which leaves out the r, or to lambdacism, hard to distinguish from lalling, he said, because it changes the r into l.

Still others, he explained, had splastic speech, which is the result of a lack of co-ordination in the speech muscles, usually caused by accidents in childbirth. Three of the students, he added, were being treated for delayed speech, one of them having arrived at the clinic last September, seven and a half years old and unable to speak at all.

"We found that he was a sociological problem," Dr. Bender said. "Before we could begin to teach him phonetics, we had to arrange for him to live away from his twin sister. Probably because of some psychological pressure in childhood, she had become his interpreter to their family and to the world and did the talking for both."

The clinic, which is operated by twenty-three students of speech correction who are studying under Dr. Bender, takes no pupils who organic speech defects, he pointed out. It is limited to twenty-five children because the demand for speech-correction instruction, he said, is so enormous that withut an arbitrary limit he clinic would be swamped with pupils.

Fears and phobias, he said, could be found in the childhood of most of the tongue-tied boys and girls who had forgotten their inhibitions at least for the moment in the excitement of their club program. Bodily relaxation and mental hygiene were the most important features of the teaching, he added.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Ale And Earty

Paul Parnell of the Ewes Farm House in Yorkshire, England, died in May 1810 at the age of 76. Since the age of 12, he had consumed daily 10 quarts of home brewed ale out of the same great silver tankard. A total of 240,000 quarts of ale extending ever 64 years, is the record consumption of this mighty patriarch.

Thwarted Love Basis For Harding Picture

Harding's daughter. Molly O'Day, Wesley Barry, Ben Alexander, Creighton Chaney, Josephine Whittell, Donald Crisp, Maidel Turner and Cecile Cunningham are included in the supporting cast.

Focussing upon Vergie Winters, the story tells of a great love that endures gossip, scandal and malicious persecution. Condemned as "scarlet" because it defies the conventions, this love is the ideal to which Vergie Winters clings through twenty-two years of vicissitudes. And in the gripping climax it is the ideal for which she is willing to give her life or her freedom.

KOBE NEWS

The senior class of Palmore Institute presented a play, "The Exchange" by Althea Thurston on the annual literary program held at 7 p.m. Tuesday, at Palmore Hall. The cast was as follows: Judge, the exchanger of miseries, T. Hiramatsu; Imp, office boy to the Judge, S. Uchiyama; A Poor Man, H. Yoshida; A Vain Woman, Y. Nakajima; and a Rich Citizen, T. Fukunaga.

This two act English play was sandwiched between a speech on the "Companionship of Books" by Mr. M. Abe and a closing addres sby Mr. H. Yoshida. The costumes were simple, and ingenuity was shown in the simplification of the scenery.

Miss Oxford directed the play. Members of the caste spoke their lines well with clear enunciation. In spite of rain, the Seventeenth Literary Meeting of the English Speaking Society of Palmore Institute was attended by a large audience and was one of the most successful in the history of Palmore Institute.

Education For Parents To Aid Children Urged

who are in their middle twenties, because these have been unable to get jobs. One in every four young Americans, between the ages of 16 and 24 is now out of school and out of work as well. Fifteen million boys and girls of these ages, who are either at school or at work are in the greatest number of cases occupying places in industry where their opportunities for advancement are limited or are marking time in the schools because there are no jobs available for them. Boys and girls who have been prepared to be doctors, lawyers, engineers, accountants and the like can't get the chance to even start in the gathering of the practical experience so very essential to the proper practice of these professions. How in the midst of this overwhelming situation, that is occupying the best minds of our country, are we to achieve some economic beginning for our children? We must not only be wise in the choice of schools and courses and professions for our children, to give them the benefit of that little edge, that may mean for them a job, but in this highly competitive situation we must lend a hand to help our boys to plan and to organize and to contact their lives so as to make possible some economic adjustment. Talk about your education for parents, it may become necessary for prospective parents to pass an examination in vocational guidance before they are permitted to usher children into this world, or at the least they may be required to show a bank-roll of a sufficient bulk to satisfy the authorities that their children and grand children will not become public charges. I am now speaking facetiously of course, it is needless to develop this point much further except that before I leave off I must warn you once more that in the matter of vocational selection, just as in all other matters affecting children, it is essential to avoid a seeming assertion of the parental authority. We have no right to enforce our views on our children, simply because we are their parents. We have all seen the ambitions of the parents thwarting their children. It will take much education of parents, especially of the generations that have been brought up to a strict adherence to rules by the heads of the house, to avert the calamity of unreasonable, poorly based insistence upon that authority. We must learn to look the facts in the face, throwing off our ancient habits and prejudices, if we are to meet our children and help them with their problems—and especially the important problem of economic adjustments in a new world.

This takes me to our third objective—namely to adjust our children so that they may lead reasonably happy lives and live in friendship and harmony with their neighbors. I will leave it to the preachers to tell us about the essential import of inculcating moral ideals in our children. But I can say from my lay observations that parents today certainly need much educating in moral ideals. With statesmen and nations blatantly lying to each other; with workers and employers each chiseling for a little advantage; with our multiple standards of personal morality, it must indeed be very confusing to the child's mind when he hears much prating about morality. How can we say to our children you must not cheat, you must not lie, you must not steal, you must not kill, when they have every evidence all about us that our society carries on amidst all these transgressions. When children begin to question why we tolerate and sometimes even respect those who do all these things which we are careful to say to them that they must not do, we need some very tall educating to make satisfactory answers.

I hope that I have here indicated that parents need educating and not in their early years alone. Throughout their lives if they are to stay alive and exert some beneficial influences on their children and society generally, they must continue to keep abreast of things and to learn. They will thus be better fitted to provide for the physical, economic and social well-being of their children; and I take it that these are the principal objectives of all parents, unless they are like the head of the community with whose story I shall close my address.

There was once a wealthy man who had come by his money after much hardness and fighting in his many dealings with his fellow man. One day he sought an office of honor from his neighbors, and because of his riches and power, he achieved that office. A man came to visit the city where this wealthy man lived, and hearing of his riches and position he decided to go to him so that he might talk with him. He asked a man to be shown the way to the rich man's house. The man replied "Oh, that old skinflint, he lives on the next street over." When he came to the street indicated, he asked yet another man to point out the house so that he might enter. This man pointed to a tall building and said "That old scoundrel lives there." Arriving before the house, the visitor asked someone working on the grounds if the rich man was in, and the worker said "Oh yeah, he is in there all right, guarding his ill gotten gains from the likes of him." Finally the visitor came face to face with the rich man and after talking to him for a while he could not repress his curiosity any longer, so he asked him "Tell me, my good man, whatever induced a man of your great material success to seek public office?" "Oh well," he answered very expansively, "You know, after all every man wants to have his fellow men think well of him and to do him honor."

Townsend Aide Made Near $2,000 Per Month

Mr. Moritz declared, "to investigate the Townsend plan, not the private affairs of this witness."

"You are out of order," Chairman Bell countered. "Please take your seat."

Mr. Moritz did so

Mr. Clements said that he was born in Amarillo, Texas, and that he was a graduate of a Fort Worth high school. He never attended college. He first went to Long Beach, Calif., in 1914, when he entered the real estate business there with his father.

"When did you first make an income tax return to the government?"

"The records of the government will be the best answer to that question."

"In 1926, when you started the promotion of Midway City, how much of a return did you make?"

"I am not sure. The record of it is in Long Beach."

Veering from income tax returns, Mr. Sullivan turned to the origin of the co-foundership. Mr. Clements told of meeting Dr. Townsend for the first time in either 1927 or 1928, when the physician had been employed to do some work in connection with the Midway City development. Although he had resigned only last Tuesday as Secretary-Treasurer of the Townsend organization, reputedly because of differences with his associate, Mr. Clements included in his story of his association with Dr. Townsend as unsolicited tribute.

"I considered Dr. Townsend a brilliant man and a physician of note," he said.

Testifies on Plan's Inception

Dr. Townsend first approached Mr. Clements in regard to the old-age pension in September or October of 1933, the witness related.

"Dr. Townsend, I think, had recently been relieved as an assistant health officer of Long Beach," he recounted. "I was in the real estate business at the time. The idea suggested by Dr. Townsend was bandied back and forth between us for some time and we did not incorporate until some time in January of 1934."

Mr. Clements provided Dr. Townsend with desk room in his office. The physician busied himself writing pamphlets and circularizing residents in the Los Angeles area in an effort to find out what the reaction was to the plan he had in mind. The response was favorable, Mr. Clements said, and about Jan. 15 the plan was installed in a small office in the Wingham Building, Long Beach.

They started with one employe, George Stringer, a bookkeeper, the witness continued. Later they employed a solicitor named Collins, who received $20 a week to begin the house-to-house canvass for members. The first bank account was opened in the Citizens State Bank of Long Beach.

Western Unit Is Strongest

About Dec. 1, 1934, the headquarters was transferred to Los Angeles. The employes had grown to twenty by that time. The bank account, then up to the $43,295.34 figure, was transferred to the Security First National Bank of Los Angeles. Mr. Clements also told of the later transfer from Los Angeles to Washington and gave the names of all regional managers for the record.

The Western regional unit, strongest of all, and taking in California, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado and Wyoming, was the area in which the organization in 1935 staged its first invasion outside of California.

Mr. Clements said that he did not have membership figures for the area. In California, there were about 1,100 clubs, he said, but he did not know their memberships.

"When did the Townsend organization begin to really spread out nationally?" asked Mr. Sullivan in closing.

"July 1, 1935, when we divided the country into four regional areas with headquarters in Washington," Mr. Clements replied.

At this point the committee recessed until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Says Clements Got $50,000

Dr. Francis E. Townsend disclosed details on March 26 at Los Angeles of a transaction in which R. E. Clements, resigned secretary treasurer of the old age pension movement, sold his 50 per cent interest in The Townsend Weekly.

Mr. Clements received $50,000 Dr. Townsend said, the board of directors using $40,000 in accumulated profits to bur Clements's interest and borrowing the remaining $10,000 from a bank.

The weekly, with a circulation estimated at 250,000, "has been making money for six or eight months," he asserted.

Hereafter, 90 per cent of the weekly profits will go to the treasury of the old age pension movement "as long as there is need for it," Dr. Townsend said.

Previously, Dr. Townsend and Mr. Clements shared equally in profits Dr. Townsend said. A "Los Angeles business man" has been selected as Mr. Clements's successor, but his name was not given.

The retirement of Mr. Clements was amicable, Dr. Townsend added. He denied emphatically that he and Mr. Clements "almost came to blows" in a dispute recently.

"In the first place, Mr. Clements is a gentleman and any one should know he would not engage in a physical altercation with a man my age," Dr. Townsend said.

He expressed confidence that Mr. Clements would not adopt a critical attitude toward the old age revolving pension movement in his testimony before a Congressional committee in Washington.

"I wanted to launch a third party," he said. "That was opposed by Democratic and Republican members of Congress who had aided us, and I dropped the idea reluctantly.

"I contended that instead of holding the movement in rigid control under two or three men, we should broaden the base, enlarge the directorate from five to seven men, and set up a national trusteeship with representatives in every State.

"Mr. Clements didn't think that a wise move."

1st Foreign Scientific Party En Route North For Eclipse Of Sun

The first of all foreign scientific parties coming to Japan to take part in observations of the coming total eclipse of the sun from Hokkaido, Dr. Stratton, professor of astrophysics at Cambridge University and leader of the British observation party, and Major Bognold of the British military wireless corps and a member of the British party, left for Hokkaido by the 9 p.m. train Wednesday from Uyeno, it is reported.

Since their arrival in Tokyo Friday morning, the two British scientists have been making necessary arrangements with Dr. Kiyofusa Sotome, head of the Tokyo Astronomical Observatory. The two will be accompanied by Dr. Fukumi of the same Observatory and arriving at Sapporo later today will make arrangements with Dr. Nakaya, a member of the Tohoku Imperial University party.

For the purpose of observation of the solar eclipse, an improvised observatory will be established in the grounds of Shari Primary School, work on which will be started about May 6, it is expected.

War Wheat Stock For Britain Urged

this matter," he added, "and we can do nothing without them. If the French had stood by us we would have been willing to go the whole way in preventing war or ending it soon after it had begun. But, as it is, our continued efforts are bringing no benefit to Ethiopia, but endanger our relations with France, which is the country on which we most depend. It will be better for all concerned, including the Ethiopians themselves, if we face the facts that no common action against Italy is possible and that economic sanctions have failed and then bring this ghastly war to an end as soon as possible."

Labor members, including Arthur Henderson, son of the late former Foreign Secretary, thought differently. He said that the price for stopping the slaughter of the Ethiopians with poisonous gas should not be paid to Premier Mussolini, and that if the dictator were allowed to win his war through the inactivity of the other European powers it would be the end of the League of Nations.

On the contrary, Mr. Henderson declared, the British Government should take its courage in both hands and insist on oil sanctions, which would render Italy powerless to resume hostilities after the rainy season. He also urged withdrawal of British and other Ambassadors from Rome.

American Help Predicted

Morgan P. Price, a Laborite, said the interest of the United States had been cooled by the do-nothing policy of the European governments, but he believed American indignation would be so revived now by Italy's use of poisonous gas that Washington would do everything in its power to restrict oil exports to Italy if the League States would only take firm action.

Viscount Cranborne, Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, told the House that the government would surely support oil sanctions if other countries would do the same. He added that Italy's use of poisonous gas raised a most serious issue, which might affect the whole future of civilizaton, but he did not indicate what this country was going to do about it.

Hearst Loses Suit To Block Inquiry By Senate Group

Justice Wheat Refuses To Enjoin The Lobby Committee's Seizure Of Telegrams

Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on April 8 denied the application of William Randolph Hearst for an injunction restraining the Senate Lobby Committee from making any use of telegrams, subpoenaed from the files of the Western Union Telegraph Company, exchanged between Mr. Hearst and his editorial employes. At the same time the committee was delving into charges of anti-New Deal activities of the Crusaders.

Mr. Hearst also sought to enjoin the Federal Communications Commission from "Unlawfully" searching the files of telegraph companies and cooperating with the committee in a search for ammunition for use by the lobby investigators, says a Washington despatch to the New York Times on April 8. The article continues:

Chief Justice Wheat held that the court was without jurisdiction as far as the Senate committee was concerned and asserted that in his opinion it was better "to leave us without any remedy than it is for a court to assume jurisdiction to try to coerce or control a committee of the Senate."

"If the Senate Committee," said Justice Wheat, "has been proceeding in a way which some people might regard as unlawful, it is better to let them continue to do it and let that be corrected in some other way than it is for us to proceed in the way that seems to me to be unlawful, to attempt to correct what they do that I do not agree with.

Feels Committee Is Immune

"I have not been informed yet of any case in which any court has assumed to dictate to a committee of the Senate what it should do and what it should not do, and I do not feel that I have any right to inaugurate any such principle as that."

The court held that the case did not, as attorneys for Mr. Hearst contended, involve the freedom of the press. Freedom of the press, Justice Wheat declared, was the right of the press to criticize the government. No such question was involved in the Hearst case, he said.

"You cannot say," Justice Wheat continued, "that the proprietor of a newspaper is not amenable to ordinary judicial process, or that his communications with his subordinates are sacred. You could not say that for a minute. I do not think any question of the freedom of the press is involved. I will have to hold that the court has no jurisdiction over that Senate committee.

Writ Against FCC Denied

In the matter of search and seizure of telegraph files by the Federal Communications Commission, Justice Wheat said that he was convinced he had the power to enjoin the commission from proceeding unlawfully. However, he said, the FCC had informed the court that its investigation was completed, that it had no copies of Hearst telegrams in its possession, and therefore the application for an injunction was denied "without prejudice to its renewal upon any evidence of further activities along the lines attacked here."

Elisha Hanson, counsel for Mr. Hearst, indicated that he would appeal the case to the Federal Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. It appears fairly certain that the case will go to the Supreme Court, and Congress has appropriated $10,000 to be used by the Black committee in defending its position before the courts.

During the hearing Mr. Hanson argued that the committee had violated the Fourth and Fifth Amendments to the Constitution, and that the actions of the committee and of the Communications Commission were a direct challenge to the freedom of the press safeguards under the Constitution.

Mr. Hanson argued that the "seizure" of the telegrams made committee members liable to fine and imprisonment for obtaining them illegally.

Crampton Harris, attorney for the Black committee, contended that the court was without authority or power to enjoin the committee. Immediately the arguments were concluded Chief Justice Wheat gave his decision, which was extemporaneous.

The financing of the Crusaders, and to a lesser extent that of the Liberty League, the Farmers Independence Council, Sentinels of the Republic, and other organizations or societies whose objectives are in some respects the same, featured the committee inquiry into the affairs of the Crusaders.

Contributions Are listed

According to the evidence Irenee du Pont has given $86,750 to the Liberty League, and $10,000 to the Crusaders, his total contributions to these organizations and several others totaling $98,300. Lammot du Pont's contributions totaled $25,750, of which $16,000 went to the Liberty League, $5,000 to the Farmers Council, and $1,000 to the Crusaders.

Alfred P. Sloan, president of General Motors, gave $10,000 to the Crusaders and $15,000 to the Liberty League. The largest giver to the Crusaders was Rowe B. Metcalf of New Milford, Conn., vice national commander, who testified that his contributions totaled about $25,000.

Fred C. Clark of Mentor, Ohio, national commander of the Crusaders, and Frederick W. Blaisdell of Chicago, director of the Central Crusaders Division, were the principal witnesses with a few other officials of lesser rank answering when these two were without the necessary information.

Mr. Clark declared that the Crusaders was not a propagandist organization, nor was it to be classed as a lobby. The mission of the Crusaders, he said, is to "clarify" public opinion, not to "educate the people." He admitted that the organization must have a lot of money to function properly and that the only way to get money, he said, was to go where the money happened to be.

Spent $148,000 on Radio

Since prohibition the activities of the Crusaders have been devoted to a large extent, Mr. Clark said, to the financing of "The Radio Voice of the Crusaders." Mr. Clark said he was "the voice" and said he had made about eighty-seven talks over the Columbia and Mutual networks.

The financing of the "Voice," Mr. Clark testified, involved the expenditure of about $148,000. He gave a list of the principal contributors to the radio fund.

Mr. Clark explained that the Crusaders received thousands of contributions in dimes, quarters and half dollars in addition to numerous ones of amounts up to $100 which were not included in lists supplied the committee. The total of these smaller gifts was not submitted today, but will be later.

Neither did the list include contributions to State and local Crusader organizations. The evidence was that it would be an almost imposible task to total all gifts to the whole Crusader network of State and local units.

The "Radio Voice," Mr. Clark said, was born at a Chicago dinner in 1934 attended by many prominent men. It was then decided to raise a radio fund which was given into the charge of three trustees, Edward Ryerson Jr., R. Douglas Stuart and Ralph A. Bard, who subsequently became trustees of the aNtional Crusaders organization.

Answering questions by Senator Gibson, Mr. Clark said that the "Radio Voice" had opposed parts of the Wheeler-Rayburn and the Banking Bills, and also the Tennessee Valley Authority legislation. Opposition to the Wagner Labor Bill was discussed but was not carried into effect, he said.

Fight on Wagner Bill Urged

When the prohibition fight was won Mr. Clark said, the Crusaders recognized and centered its efforts on all activities "destructive of sound government."

"We are opposed to anything that makes the government master of the people," he added.

Senator Gibson read a letter from Mr. Blaisdell to Mr. Clark in which Mr. Blaisdell suggested an attack on the Wagner bill which he said "was the most dangerous bill" so far as labor was concerned, before Congress. In another letter Mr. Blaisdell suggested that the "Voice" eliminate the bonus from a certain radio speech because to oppose the bonus might alienate the support of a powerful chain of newspapers

Senator Black asked Mr. Blaisdell what chain he had in mind, but Mr. Blaisdell said he did not recall. He admitted later that he might have been thinking of the Hearst newspapers.

In the letter Mr. Blaisdell suggested that the Crusaders maintain a keen watch on "these birds in Washington."

"I suppose the 'birds' referred to are members of Congress," said Senator Gibson.

"I have not the remotest idea," replied Mr. Clark.

Lobby Activities Denied

For the first five months of the campaign the radio time over the Columbia system was free, Mr. Clark testified. Subsequently when the "free" service was terminated the "Voice" broadcast over the Mutual network and the time was paid for.

"Radio," said Mr. Clark, "was the spearhead of the movement."

James F. Bell, president of General Mills, it was testified, was active in raising the radio fund.

"And the fact is," said Senator Gibson, "the Crusaders was a lobby organization opposing legislation before Congress?"

"No, that is not true. We were not lobbying," Mr. Clark answered.

"In these radio talks," said Senator Black, "did you tell the people that the 'Voice' was being financed by a group of big business men?"

"I did not. I did not think it was necessary," Mr. Clark answered.

A letter from the files of the Crusaders was read into the evidence in which the suggestion was made that "important people" be asked to "write Palay congratulating him on his good work."

"Who is Paley?" asked Senator Gibson.

"Head of the Columbia Broadcasting System," replied Mr. Clark.

There was also a blanket telegram addressed to a large number of citizens asking them for their reaction to the "Radio Voice." Those to whom the message was sent included Bernard M. Baruch, Sewell Avery, Representative Chester C. Bolton of Ohio; Frank R. Kent and Mark Sullivan, newspaper columnists; James P. Warburg, Ogden Mills, Cleveland H. Dodge, John W. Davis, Winthrop Aldrich and William Woodward, New York banker.

"Did Mr. Woodward make a contribution to the Crusaders of $10,500 and also advance $3,500, of which $34 was repaid in 1934?" asked Senator Black.

Mr. Clark said if that was the record it must be true.

Asked if the Fords had contributed to the Crusaders, Mr. Clark replied that the organization never received so much as "a nickel" from Henry or Edsel Ford.

"And we never received a nickel from the Rockefellers either," he added.

"Do you think, Mr. Clark," Senator Black asked, "that any of these big business men who financed your radio campaign would have contributed a cent if the 'Voice' had favored inheritance taxes, the Wheeler-Rayburn Bill or other such legislation?"

"That was never considered," replied Mr. Clark, who added that the contributors had never interfered to control or influence the radio campaign.

research experts.

"No party test has been applied in assembling the division. Those who have joined us have done so in the belief that the policies of the Roosevelt Administration are in violation of the teachings of experience and subversive of the fundamental principles of American traditions.

"The research division was organized primarily because many of the government reports containing the statistical and factual information were not fully comprehensive and in many instances were based upon selected data in the effort of the New Dealers to justify unsound economic and constitutional theories. Our purpose is to supply the public with full and accurate information, well documented, from which they can draw their own conclusions."

"Good Things Will Be Approved"

Dr. Saxon, receiving the press, said that the New Deal acts would be critically and scientifically analyzed.

"The good things will be approved," he went on, "and the fallacies exposed."

"Our investigation of the New Deal thus far has shown some things that we can thoroughly approve, but we disagree radically with the methods to achieve the ends. This is especially true in the social legislation.

"In our analysis of the program for business recovery we have found that recovery abroad has proceeded faster and more permanently than here, and we, therefore, logically conclude that many of the New Deal plans have retarded business pick-ups. We intend to point out the failures as we see them and make recommendations for their correction according to American traditions.

"The work of the division will be valuable when we take over the government next January," Chairman Fletcher interjected.

"Some of the objectives of the New Deal are laudable, but the methods are destructive of American institutions and are not workable," Dr. Saxon continued. "We propose to approach all questions in a purely scientific way and believe that our analysis will stand the test of impartiality."

Dr. Saxon said that some of the experts were Demoncrats and that he himself had voted for Roosevelt, adding "but I regret it."

Asked about the currency situation, he said:

"We are in a serious credit inflation at present and have gone further in that direction than Germany did when she embarked on currency inflation."

The first report will be on taxation, and some of the features of the pending Tax Bill will be discussed in advance of action by Congress, Chairman Fletcher said.

The group of educators will be increased at the end of the college year and others will act as advisers. In the end the research bureau will represent experts in every line and they will be employed throughout the campaign to furnish material for speakers.

TO COMPILE BIOGRAPHIES

Mrs. Shigure Hasegawa, noted writer, has been elected chairman of the committee of prominent Japanese women who are to write the Japanese section for the Encyclopedia of Women in History which is being compiled under the direction of Dr. Mary A. Beard, noted American historian, and Dr. Anna Askanazy, eminent woman philosopher of Vienna.

Other members of her committee are Baroness Ishimoto, Mrs. Itoko Nizuma, Mrs. Kuniko Imai, Mrs. Kanoko Okamoto, Mrs. Yaoi Nogami, Mrs. Kikuko Yamakawa, Mrs. Akiko Yosano, and Mrs. Natsuko Kawasaki, all well known women writers. Mrs. Hasegawa is the author of "Biographies of Beautiful Women" which is being reviewed in a series of articles in the Sunday Japan Times & Mail.

The committee met for the first time Monday afternoon when formal statement was issued to the press. Baroness Ishimoto said that the biographies of Japanese women will show that they have not always taken a "back seat" but have affected history.

The encyclopedia will be published in English and German and will be divided into three periods, the first up to the Christian era, the second to 1448, and the last to the present day. After all the writing is completed, the women discussed will be classified alphabetically and not by nationalities. Between 200 and 400 words will be devoted to each character.

As there is no history of this type in Japan, a Japanese edition is being compiled which will contain biographies of 1,500 women. There will be no class distinction among the women selected—they will range from Empresses to farm girls.

HOME PROBLEM CLUB LUNCHEON

The annual luncheon of the Home Problem club will be held at the Keisei Juraku restaurant, Ueno Keisei Densha station at 11:30 a.m. Wednesday, May 13. Those who plan to attend are asked to make reservations with Mrs. Russel Durgin, president, 5 of 7 Nichome, Fujimicho, Kojimachi, before May 10.

WOMEN'S MEETING

Netherlands Seek 120,000 Acres Of Land From Sea

New Soil Needed To Offset Withdrawals For Towns, Canals And Harbors

Initial work on the second of the four projected polders—areas of low land reclaimed by dikes—in the former Zuider Zee is under way.

Tenders were received on April 29 for the construction of a work-harbor on the small island of Urk, according to the Amsterdam correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

The area now being drained is the northeast polder. The embankment and the draining of the entrapped sea water are to be completed in five years. The sea bottom then will add another 120,000 acres of fertile ground to the Netherland's arable land. The cost of reclaiming this portion of land is estimated at roughly 125,000,000 florins ($83,500,000) or $700 an acre. In another 10 years, then, waving grain is to grow on another section of the bottom of the erstwhile Zuider Zee.

Huge Barring Dam

The first stage was the draining of the northwest polder, measuring 50,000 acres, and after that, the construction of the huge barring dam across the Zuider Zee from the province North Holland to the province Friesland. The northwest polder, which was drained in 1930, is now yielding abundant crops. Farms and villages of "colonists" in the newly won land have sprung up everywhere.

The cost of draining this polder, preparing the soil and other work has been approximately $50,000,000 or $1000 per acre. But this was real, hardy pioneer work. The enclosing dam had to be constructed in the open, tempestuous seas, which caused enormous difficulties. But after that, the barring dam, enclosing the Zuider Zee, was completed at a cost of some $80,000,000 which makes the work on the other designed polders much easier.

Unemployment Relief

The expenditure for the draining of the second polder is fully justified, the Government declared recently with a view to unemployment relief and also to the raising of the economic resources of the country. One can get some idea of the enormous task if it is realized that the soil has to be made suitable for cultivation and habitation, farms and villages have to be built, canals, ditches, bridges, locks and sluices, pumping stations and other buildings have to be constructed.

In the relatively small northwest polder of 50,000 acres, besides the construction of roads, feeding drains have been excavated with a total length of about 750 miles, and ditches with a total length of about 25,000 miles, which is equal to the circumference of the earth.

300,000 Acres Reclaimed

Under normal conditions of international trade there is a shortage of arable land in the Netherlands. The total area of waste lands in this country amounts to 1,150,000 acres. But a large part of this is totally unfit for cultivation and will have to be afforested. Even an intense fallowing of the remaining lands could not meet the demand of arable land of the farmers of the lighter soils.

The Netherlands have always had a special liking for embanking and reclaiming some of the water patches which are so liberally scattered over this small country. Since 1846, about 300,000 acres have thus been reclaimed, including the northwest polder under the Zuider Zee reclaiming plan.

Increase in Arable Land

The fallowing of waste land has yielded an increase of arable land of about 800,000 acres, so that during the last century the total increase of cultivable land has been more than 1,100,000 acres, giving an average of 10,000 acres a year.

As the extension of towns, construction of roads, canals and harbors is withdrawing soil from cultivation at a rate of 6000 acres a year, there is only a balance of 405 acres for the increase, while the population is growing fast. So the reclaiming of the Zuider Zee is held to be also justified from a purely economic point of view.

Highway Built on Dam

When at some distant date all four designed polders are completed, 550,000 acres will have been reclaimed since 1930, which is 7 per cent of the total and 10 per cent of the arable area of the Netherlands.

After the completion of the whole draining plan, the Yssel Lake will be 270,000 acres.

The dam has a concrete road for fast traffic, a cyclists' path, a path for pedestrians and space for a railway track. The railway is not yet constructed, because the dam must be allowed to set somewhat longer.

Ford Roadster Wins Race For Stock Cars At Daytona Beach

Mechanical endurance and driver skill were tested to the full in the inaugural of the Daytona Beach Road Race for stock cars run March 8 on Florida's famed natural racing course. The road race was the first of its kind at Daytona Beach and it is planned to make it an annual event.

Twenty-seven stock cars were entered in the race which was scheduled for 250 miles. Two turns were involved on each lap in getting from the road to the beach and back again. Loose sand and the rising tide which reduced the beach racing course to a narrow strip made the race one of the most difficult ever staged.

Before many laps had been covered the sand on the turns became so deep that some of the cars had to be pulled out by wreckers. And finally, the race was stopped at 241 miles, because the tide had risen so high that it was no longer safe to run on the beach.

Won By Ford Car

First prize of $1,700 was collected by Milt Marion of St. Albans, Vermont, who piloted a standard Ford V-8 roadster. Of the 27 cars entered, only 10 were left when Marion was flagged down at the 241 miles mark. The first seven and the tenth of these were Ford V-8's.

Tommy Elmore of Jacksonville, Florida, collected $1,000 for second place, and Ben Shaw of Westfield, New Jersey, got $700 for third, triumphing over "Wild Bill" Cummings of Indianapolis, George "Doc" Mackenzie of Eddington, Pennsylvania, and Major Goldie Gardner of England who were the pre-race favorites. All three were forced out of the running with mechanical trouble before the race had gone 150 miles.

Despite the difficulties of the course, the winning Ford V-8 averaged 47.8 miles per hour.

American Tax Issues Discussed By Graves

amount of revenue can be secured—a sales tax. Within a very few years, we have witnessed the rapid development of state retail sales taxes and even a local sales tax here in New York City. It has been my difficult and unpleasant duty to administer such a levy in this State. I found that it was not suited to state or local use and should be resorted to only in an extreme emergency. The difficulty of determining when a sale is at retail, ascertaining the receipts from the sale of property when both property and service are involved and the complications injected by the interstate commerce feature impel me to that conclusion.

If sales taxation is necessary—and I am reluctantly led to the conclusion that it is—I say unhesitatingly that the tax should be a federal manufacturers' sales tax. Uniformity of application, collection at the source and the abolition of expensive state administration would result. True, a sales tax does not measure ability to pay, but we have reached the point where we can no longer hope to tax the rich and well-to-do only. We may as well face squarely the inevitable fact that in future years people of small and modest means will pay larger taxes than they have in the past. The question is one of method alone. A national manufacturers' sales tax, entering into the cost of goods sold and passed on to the ultimate consumer, affords the consumer an easy installment method of paying taxes without increasing the cost of collection. It is for these reasons that I favor such a tax rather than lower exemptions under the personal income tax or higher rates on low and moderate incomes.

I shall now discuss what I consider the most important single problem in the field of taxation. If we are to recreate and maintain a normal, healthy, economic order, it is essential that two major improvements in taxation be effected. The first is the attainment of a substantial degree of uniformity in the more important tax fields, and the second, is the advoidance of competitive taxation and double taxation, with resulting unnecessary annoyance and expense to business and excessive administrative costs to government. It is vitally essential that federal, state and local revenue systems, be coordinated or integrated, if we are to attain these objectives.

Separation Of Sources

Let me review the more important suggested methods of approach. The first demands that sources of revenue shall be separated. It implies that certain taxes be allotted to the federal government, others to the states, and still others to the localities. To a certain extent, this principle is now being applied. The federal government levies no general property tax. The states are prohibited from levying customs duties. Several of the states have released the general property tax to the localities for their exclusive use. When the application of this method to other tax fields is considered, its effectiveness as a complete remedy appears limited. Were it possible, and I am convinced that it is not, to work out a satisfactory separation at a given time, the plan would not be flexible enough to withstand in succeeding years the changing balance of needs for the different layers of government.

Another suggestion holds that a solution of the problem can be found through interestate cooperation. This offers some promise but it hardly can be considered adequate. About all that states can do, as between themselves, is to enter into reciprocal agreements. A measurable degree of success has thus been attained in inheritance taxation, to a lesser, but nevertheless perceptible degree in personal income taxation, and rather slow but encouraging progress is being made in the field of corporate taxation. Economic, industrial and social conditions vary so widely, and political philosophies differ so markedly among the several states that it is too much to expect a given state to sacrifice its material interest just to satisfy an ideal. Hence, this method holds but limited promise.

A third proposal calls for the centralization of administration. This plan, carried to its logical conclusion, implies that the states would cede to the federal government authority to collect all major taxes, excepting only the general property tax. This would include personal and corporate income taxes, the inheritance tax, motor fuel, beverage, tobacco and other consumption taxes. Much may be said in favor of this suggestion. Were it adopted, complete coordination and integration of federal and state taxing systems would be attained. Necessarily, it would require the distribution of federally collected revenues to the states and to the localities. Otherwise, they would starve. The general property tax could not possibly carry the state and local tax-load. If this method were adopted, duplicate taxation would disappear and the added cost of duplicate administration would be eliminated.

The objections to this plan are obvious. This is a federal country, made up of 48 sovereign states. The states and their localities are jealous of their rights. They would be fearful of depending on the Congress for needed revenue. Confidence in the impartial administration of tax laws and an equitable distribution of revenue is lacking. And, in the last analysis, radically differing political philosophies render the adoption of the plan, however desirable, impossible at this time.

The fourth and last suggestion would extend the crediting device. Were this plan adopted, the federal government would apply the principle which it has adopted in the case of the estate tax to other taxes and credit against its tax similar taxes paid to the states. This principle was incorporated, about ten years ago, in the federal estate tax and has worked well. Proponents of the plan argue that it might well be extended to federal taxes on personal and corporate incomes and, perchance, to some other federal taxes.

I feel that no one of the remedies offers a complete cure. To some extent, we shall, no doubt, have to proceed by the trial and error method.

Definite Changes Proposed

From something more than a superficial consideration of the problem, I am led to propose certain definite changes which I believe will go far toward accomplishing the desired objectives.

My suggestions are:

1. That the federal estate tax be amended to provide that the existing credit shall be extended to the entire federal tax rather than to the first 20 per cent thereof. This crediting device has been in effect for several years and has worked well. It effectively checked Florida's competitive bid for retired people of wealth. The claims of a state to the estate tax are as strong, if not stronger, than those of the federal government. That is why I proposed the extension of this existing practice.

2. That the federal act taxing personal and corporate incomes be amended to allow credits for taxes paid to the states up to some percentage of the federal tax. I shall not undertake to specify these percentages except to say they should not be less than 25 per cent nor more than 50 per cent. In the case of corporations, the credit should be not only for income taxes paid to the states but for any kind of a franchise or business tax so paid, excepting only taxes on real estate. The effect of the adoption of this plan would be to attain a substantial degree of uniformity in these two fields of taxation. You business men would have the comforting assurance that the tax costs of your competitors, wherever located in this country, are about the same as yours. The personal income taxpayer, likewise, would have the satisfaction of knowing that people in other states with like incomes are taxed as he is taxed. Competition between the states very largely would be eliminated. The economic welfare of the nation is harmed if the states compete for persons of great wealth. One who receives a large income or accumulates a large estate draws it from the entire nation, not from a given state or locality. If he lives under the Stars and Stripes, his taxes should not be substantially less in Florida than in New York, California or Illinois.

Withdraw Consumption Tax

3. That the states withdraw from the consumption tax field and that the federal government levy and collect such sales and consumption taxes as are needed. The proceeds should be retained or a part apportioned among the states, according to relative revenue needs. I appreciate that this general statement covers a wide variety of taxes, including, of course, the manufacturers' sales tax. It may be said with assurance that the federal government can more efficiently and economically administer them than can the states. The degree of efficiency of state administration differs with the commodity taxed. For instance, because motor fuel is bulky and not readily concealed, a state can more effectively administer a tax on gasoline, than it can a tax on cigarettes or alcoholic beverages. Nevertheless, the federal government can lay the tax at the source, at the point of manufacture or production, thus being assured of a tax on the entire quantity produced, manufactured or imported and at a low administrative cost. State administration is much more expensive for the simple reason that difficulties are encountered in interstate commerce and in watching retail outlets.

4. That the principle of separation of sources of revenue be continued as it presently exists and that the federal government on the one hand and the states on the other, assiduously refrain from levying any more duplicate taxes on the same objects of taxation.

5. That the states whenever and wherever possible enact uniform laws containing such reciprocal provisions and formulas as will avoid double taxation of property, income or other taxable object.

EMPEROR GRANTS AUDIENCES

His Majesty the Emperor Tuesday morning received in audience a number of Japanese diplomats and high officers of the Army and the Navy.

At 10:30 a.m. His Majesty received in farewell audience Mr. Saburo Kurusu, the newly-appointed Ambassador to Belgium, and Mr. Masayuki Tani, the Minister to Austria and Hungary, who are shortly leaving Tokyo for their respective posts. The two officials were later received in audience by Her Majesty the Empress.

Chiefs-of-staff of the divisions throughout the land and garrisons in Formosa, Korea and Manchoukuo including Lieutenant-General Seishiro Itagaki, who are in Tokyo attending their annual conference, were received in audience by H. M. the Emperor in the Imperial Palace at 11:30 a.m. They were accompanied to the Palace by Lieutenant-General Toshizo Nishio, Vice-Chief of the General Staff.

His Majesty also received in audience Lieutenant-General Kyosuke Kawamura, Commander of the First Division at the Imperial Palace at 10:30 a.m. in the presence of Lieutenant-General Okiye Usami, the Chief Aide-de-Camp to His Majesty. Lieutenant-General Kawamura is shortly leaving Tokyo for Manchuria with units under his command to take up his assigned duties.

At noon, His Majesty gave a luncheon for 36 naval officers including Admiral Nobumasa Suetsugu, a member of the Supreme War Council, who have discharged their duties as this year's special naval inspectors, at the Homeiden Hall of the Imperial Palace. The function was also attended by Fleet-Admiral H. I. H. Prince Hiroyasu Fushimi, Chief of the Naval General Staff, the Imperial Household Minister, Mr. Tsuneo Matsudaira, the Grand Chamberlain to His Majesty, Admiral Kantaro Suzuki, the Chief Aide-de-Camp to His Majesty, Lieutenant-General Okiye Usami, and other high officers of the Navy.

Prior to the Imperial luncheon, the navy members of the Supreme War Council held a meeting in a hall in the Imperial Palace at 10:40 a.m. when reports were made by Admiral Suetsugu, the special naval inspector, on the results of his inspection of the Sasebo Naval Station and the Maizuru Naval Base in Formosa. Later, the War Councillors held an exchange of views.

Franco-British Discord Laid To Laval Policies

Paris Rejection Of Oil Sanctions Against Italy Called Bar To Unity Now

England, allied with Prussia and Austria, defeated France in the Napoleonic wars. England, allied with France, defeated Germany and Austria in the World War. Hence the importance which Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler, with his mind bent on the next war, attaches to separating England and France.

So long as the two western European democracies stand together Der Fuehrer knows that his goal, a pan-German hegemony over Central Europe, is an idle dream. The Nazi leader has gone a long way toward achieving his ambition for never, since the days of the Ruhr invasion, have the relations between England and France been so taut as they are today. For this, France has largely Pierre Laval to thank, according to John Elliott, Paris correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune.

Missed Alliance Opportunity

The French government of last year, when Laval was Premier and Foreign Minister, lost an exceptional opportunity to obtain a British alliance. But with trying to hold Great Britain without losing his new ally, Italy, Laval hesitated and then was lukewarm about supporting the sanctions against Premier Benito Mussolini. The French government almost had to be dragged into supporting the League of Nations against Italy. Then Laval torpedoed the oil sanctions by bringing forward the Laval-Hoare proposals for settlement of the Italo-Ethiopian conflict. The result was that France alienated British public opinion without winning Italy's gratitude.

The two nations also do not see eye to eye on Germany's denunciation of the Locarno pact. To the British, Hitler's action in sending German troops into the Rhineland is not as reprehensible as Premier Mussolini's policy of shipping his Black Shirts into Africa. For the English argue that Hitler's deed, while infringing on the treaty, is not an act of aggression, since, after all, the German soldiers are only entering German cities, while Mussolini is trying to destroy the independence of another nation. To which the French reply that Hitler's action is a far more serious offense since, carried out in Europe, it constitutes a threat to the peace of the world, while Premier Mussolini, in the eyes of the French, is only conducting a petty colonial operation.

Diverse Objectives Cited

More fundamental is the difference between the British and French approach to Germany after the World War. While Great Britain always has been anxious to set Germany on her feet again in order to restore the balance of power, France, fearing war revenge, has constantly sought to keep Germany down and encircled. Hence the French invasion of the Ruhr and unsuccessful plots to detach the Rhineland from the Reich.

French unwillingness in recent years to envisage Germany as an equal was illustrated when the late Louis Barthou rejected Hitler's offer to limit the armies of the two countries to 300,000 men each in his famous note of April 17,1934. The British, regarding this negative as the loss of a great opportunity to achieve disarmament, made amends by concluding their naval agreement with Germany in June of last year. With the typical British lack of logic, which is the despair of the French, they thus condoned Hitler's unilateral denunciation of the military clauses of the Treaty of Versailles just three months after they had solemnly taken part in the League of Nations' solemn condemnation of that action.

And so today, while London regards Hitler's peace offer as a Heaven-sent opportunity to make real peace, Paris mistrustfully considers it just an artful maneuver on Der Fuehrer's part to make his violation of the Locarno pact palatable to the English.

Then, again, the French, holding that war with Germany is inevitable unless such a powerful coalition is erected against the Reich that Hitler will realize that another war would be suicide for his country, have been making alliances in the East with the Little Entente and Soviet Russia. But these very alliances, even from the French viewpoint, are a doubtful asset. For they make the British timid about making any military commitments with France.

For while Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin has said in the House of Commons that Great Britain's frontier is on the Rhine and while England would doubtless not permit Germany to march into France, nevertheless the British do not want to be dragged into war automatically because of France's Eastern alliances. Fortunately, though strained, the entente between England and France still remains intact. For now, as before, the cordial co-operation between the two great democracies of western Europe remains the best insurance against Hitler's making a concentration camp out of Europe, as he has out of Germany.

Borah Spent Only $10 To Win In Wisconsin

Senator Borah's successful Wisconsin primary campaign set him back just $10, some of his supporters estimated recently.

In that sum they included one round-trip railroad ticket for his jaunt from Chicago to Milwaukee for his single speech of the campaign and a night's hotel bill, according to the New York Times.

The Senator asserted that his adherents went into the Wisconsin fight with "barely enough money to hire a hall for the one speech."

"The State (Republican) committee on the other hand," he asserted, "even spent money which was raised under the auspices of the Republican National Committee to be used in the November campaign."

Hearst Assailed In Senate Speech

papers with war news.

He said The Associated Press began an investigation which disclosed that the I. N. S. had gained access to news reports of The Associated Press by bribing an employe in the Cleveland bureau.

He accused the publisher of deliberately stirring up war sentiment in 1917 because it would "sell more papers." Mr. Hearst depended on the public's inability to remember, he declared, adding:

"Who remembers the wicked and dastardly part played by Hearst in bringing on the war with Spain."

He said that the publisher's policy was "as unstable as the wind" and that he "may blow hot in Chicago, and cold in Atlanta."

"No man in the country today is more despised by the men who work for him," he declared at one point.

He read a magazine article purportling to outline the nature and extent of the Hearst holdings, and said, "I want to pay tribute" to the publisher's financial skill.

Hanson's Brief to the Court

Mr. Hanson, as lawyer for Mr. Hearst, argued late in the day in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against dismissing an injunction suit brought to restrain the lobby committee from making any use of Hearst telegrams subpoenaed from the telegraph companies and from attempting to obtain more such messages.

Mr. Hearst has alleged that the committee's actions constituted an invasion of the freedom of the press and violation of the constitutional guarantee against unreasonable search and seizure. The committee has moved dismissal, contending that the court was without jurisdiction over administrative acts of the Senate.

"The fundamental issue in this case is whether the committee can commit acts which the Constitution forbids and reserve to itself the sole power to pass upon the lawfulness of its acts," Mr. Hanson's brief today said.

"If the contention (of the committee) is correct," he said at another point, "then we have had our liberties destroyed and are back in the pre-revolutionary days of George III, Lord Halifax and other oppressors of liberty."

Mr. Hanson's brief argued that the courts had jurisdiction of the Hearst injunction suit under Article III of the Constitution which provides that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity, arising under this Constitution."

Sees "Sacred" Rights Traduced

It also set up the contention that "a court of equity has the power to restrain unconstitutional acts of a committee of the Congress or an individual member thereof."

It asserted that the original Hearst bill of complaint did not challenge the right of Congress to exercise its duly delegated powers; it added:

"What the bill of complaint does challenge, however, is the attempt of the committee members, defendants herein, to traduce sacred provisions of the Constitution of the United States and set themselves up as sole judges of their acts."

The powers of Congress as enumerated in the Constitution, it maintained, are limited by the amendments guaranteeing free press and freedom from unreasonable search and seizure.

"Liberties of the citizens as guaranteed by the Constitution depend on enforceable restraints against abuses of power," said the brief. "Therefore, an improper exercise of Congressional investigatory powers, doing and threatening irreparable damage can be restrained by the courts in an equity proceeding where there is no adequate remedy at law.

"Neither house of Congress is the final arbiter of its own powers where private rights and liberties of citizens are at stake. Otherwise, the dominance of the legislative branch of the government over both the Executive and Judicial Departments would be absolute.

"And the citizens of this country would be subject to a Parliamentary dictatorship from the excesses of which there could be no relief."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Tyndale

William Tyndale (1484-1536), a native of Gloucestershire, England, is the true father of the modern English Bible. His sound scholarship, lucid diction and majestic rhymnare responsible for four-fifths of our present day Version.

He incurred the hostility of the contemporary clergy, because his translation of the Bible was far superior to the versions then accepted. The Tyndale Bible was declared untrustworthy and tainted with heresy. Tyndale had to flee from prosecution and hid from the spies of Henry VIII for many years. The Tyndale Bibles, printed abroad and smuggled into England in flour bags and bales of cloth, were hunted out by the authorities and burned.

Tyndale was denounced by a disloyal friend in 1535. He was seized and imprisoned at Vilvorde, Belgium, where he spent 16 months in a desolate dungeon. He was brought to trial and convicted on October 6, 1536. The Father of the English Bible was strangled and his body burned at the stake. His dying words were, "Lord, open the King of England's eyes".

Proposal To Boycott Olympic Games Voted Down By English AA

Domei

LONDON, April 26.—A proposal to boycott the Olympic Games at Berlin this summer was defeated at the annual meeting of the Amateur Athletic Association. Lord Burghley, who succeeded Lord Desborough as chairman, Harold Abraham, Jack Lovelock and Douglas Lowe were among the famous athletes who opposed the suggestion.

George H. Elvin, secretary of the National Worker's Sports Association, proposed the motion, which stated that the spirit which prompted the promotion of the Olympic Games could not be forwarded by participation at the 1936 Olympiad in Berlin.

The proposer withdrew the motion on the promise of the secretary to call a special meeting to consider the question if a request were made within two months.

Lord Burghley stated that Germany had promised that there would be no racial discrimination, and that Jews would be allowed to compete.

Mr. Abrahams, who stated that he was himself of Jewish origin, said that the International Olympic Committee had decided to hold the Games in Berlin, the British Olympic Committee had agreed to compete, and it was not for the A.A.A. to refuse to take part.

Miss Sugimachi

TO GIVE RECITAL

Miss Miyoshi Sugimachi, soprano, will give a recital at the Sanshi-kai Hall, Hibiya, at 7 p.m. May 25. Miss Aiko Tashiro will assist at the piano.

Miss Sugimachi is a well known Japanese vocalist and a Victor Gramophone Company artist. She was born in Nagano Prefecture and has lived in America where she won success in a series of recitals. In Los Angeles, Chicago, and New York, her recitals were well received.

To introduce Japanese music, she made several gramophone records at the Victor Talking Machine Company in America, which have been very popular. She returned to Tokyo in last December. Hence this will be her first recital in Japan.

Two years ago, she appeared on the stage of the Hollywood Hall. When T. I. H. Prince and Princess Takamatsu visited Los Angeles, she was granted an audience by the Imperial Prince and Princess and sang several vocal compositions in their presence.

At the recital at the Sanshi-kai Hall, on May 25, she will sing modern vocal compositions and some Japanese songs. The program of the recital is as follows:

1. O Cessate di piagarmi ..... Scarlatti

New Brain Studies Aid Speech Defect

Dr. S. T. Orton Reports Advance In Control Of Language Disorders In Children

New advances in the study of the correlationship of speech defects to brain injury were reported recently by Dr. Samuel T. Orton, Professor of Neurology and Neuropathology at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University. This new knowledge, it is hoped, will help to check developmental disorders in children, such as word blindness and word deafness, by paying closer attention to the three factors of anatomy, heredity and training which are closely associated in the development of the child, Dr. Orton said, according to the New York Times.

Dr. Orton, one of the foremost neuropathologists of the country and winner of the 1936 Salmon Memorial Award of the New York Academy of Medicine, gave the first of the three Thomas W. Salmon Memorial lectures before a large audience at the Academy of Medicine.

Dr. Orton's lecture was a report on the investigation now being conducted at Columbia into developmental disorders of the language faculty and the psychiatric importance of such disorders. The investigation, Dr. Orton pointed out, seeks to find a key to developmental disorders in children through study of language losses in the adult. Dr. Orton's report was hailed by medical authorities as marking a new advance in a field of knowledge which, as yet, has been very little cultivated.

Speech Faculty Very Old

Tracing back the language faculty in man to "at least" one-half million years ago, Dr. Orton explained that man's brain may be divided into two hemispheres, in one of which are centered the speech faculties and in the other the motor faculties.

"A very small area of brain destruction, if it be in a critical place, often gives rise to very extensive loss of language," Dr. Orton declared. "There is no direct relation between the amount of loss in language and the size of the area of destruction, suggesting, strikingly, that we are dealing with a disturbance of a normal physiological process in these language disorders, and not, as was held in the older view, with the destruction of brain depositories for words.

"The second fact of arresting interest is that one side of the brain is all important in the language process and the other side either useless or unused. So striking is this that we know that a small area of destruction in an appropriate area in the controlling half of the brain will cause extensive loss in the language faculty, while an equal area of destruction in the same part of the inactive hemisphere will cause no disturbance in language whatsoever, and, indeed, will give no recognizable symptoms."

Dr. Orton declared that the reasons for the evolution of this unilateral control in the brain are not yet known. He suggested that the centralization of the language faculties in one-half of the brain was evolved to prevent confusion between the two halves of the brain. He explained that "both hemispheres" are similar in size and in cell equipment, and either "master brain" is competent from a structural point of view to take full command.

Five language disorders may result from damage to that portion of the brain which commands that faculties of writing, reading and speaking, Dr. Orton said.

Word blindness, or alexia, causes sudden loss of the capacity to read in a patient previously literate. This malady may result from a stroke or other injury to the brain. Vision is unimpaired, the loss being confined entirely to the capacity to recognize words at sight.

"Usually such cases recognize the individual letters of the word and can read them separately, and occasionally they can recognize the word from spelling it out in this way, but the word as a whole has lost those associations which formerly immediately brought recognition of its meaning," Dr. Orton reported. "In such cases there is also a loss in the ability to write, although it can very often be shown that there is no loss in the handwriting skill."

Word Comprehension Lacking

Word deafness may result from damage in the auditory portions of the brain, Dr. Orton explained. This ailment causes the loss of the ability to understand the meaning of the spoken word, although the sufferer is able to understand the meaning of all other sounds, such as the dinner bell.

Dr. Orton declared that a third ailment consists in motor agraphia, or loss of the ability to write, without paralysis and with no loss in ability to understand the printed word.

The ability for speech is lost, without the loss of understanding of spoken words, by sufferer from motor aphasia, Dr. Orton continued. The victim can no longer recall the movements necessary for speech, although he can recognize instantly words which are spoken to him, he explained.

Those afflicted with apraxia suffer loss of memory of complex learned movements, without paralysis. Dr. Orton reported that one individual suffered almost complete loss of the ability to typewrite by sense of the position of the keys.

Dr. Orton declared that autopsies have shown that "almost without exception" language losses occur only when the damage to the brain has occurred in that half of the brain which was opposite to the individual's master hand.

"The individual at birth starts with no unilateral superiority of either hand, nor, as far as we can determine, of either side of the brain," he explained. "He does, however, carry without much question a hereditary tendency toward the development of superiority in one of the other side."

ment of taxation for increasing revenues. But he said that he could say nothing definite as long as expenditures remained uncertain, thus avoiding to commit himself as to new taxation schemes. As to local finances he hoped to study more. The lowmoney interest policy was defended as not likely to affect the bond absorbing capacity of the country. Against successive issues of bonds proper measures would be taken to prevent violently inflationary results. Administrative and legislative procedure would perhaps be resorted to, but such things would be avoided as far as possible to let finances take their own natural course. In effect, he would be opposed to any violent or sudden change. As to the issue rate of public bonds the present rate of 3.5 per cent would be maintained, though it would by no means be held as unchangeable. He had no intention of lowering the rate of interest on postal savings deposits.

The next member to put questions to the Finance Minister was Mr. Zembei Horikiri, of Seiyukai. He began by quoting from the lecture Mr. Baba had given at the Tokyo Imperial University last year, where he had stated his view that any long-range financial view would be impossible except for a definite estimate of defense expenditure which formed a major portion of the national budget. The speaker wished to know what view the Minister took on this point at present. Next as for the idea of increasing taxation, the speaker dwelled at large on the bad features of taxation as it had been designed and enforced by the bureaucrats in the past, saying that taxation should in all cases be distributed on a fair and equitable basis. Referring to the proposed issue of national bonds, Mr. Horikiri asked what measure the Minister had in mind in order effectually to meet the bad consequences of heavy bond issues. Mr. Horikiri's interpellation was regarded as important as heralding the attitude to be taken by Seiyukai in consideration of the budget with regard to defense and armament expenditures and to new taxation legislation.

Mr. Baba, Finance Minister, rising in response, stated with regard to the budget that the figures to be considered at the present session were largely after the pattern of those of the former Ministry, but it meant not his intention of following the financial policy of the late Minister. With but little time at his disposal he had had to content himself, against his will, with what he had taken over from the previous Ministry. As for taxation, Mr. Baba believed that revenue could not be increased adequately by making accretions upon the existing system. He would have to completely alter the system, even taking in local taxation, with an eye always to equity in distribution. In view of these things he had not been able to prepare any taxation plan for the present session promising it for the next.

At this moment Mr. Horikiri repeatedly called the attention of the chairman who would not give him opportunity of interpolation. An objecting voice was raised from the Seiyukai section, but the Chairman gave the rostrum to the next interpellator, Mr. Takao Saito, of Minseito.

Mr. Saito's speech, opened by questioning the Prime Minister if he really thought the present administrative system of the country required changes and alterations in such manner as the Ministry was understood to be intent upon. In the latter part of his speech the veteran politician of Minseito took up the military incident of February 26. His argument well considered, well delivered and straight to the point, was hailed as expressive of the thoughts common to a large section of the national minds.

In most impressive moments the session reached a state of very high tension. War Minister Terauchi's response on the occasion, marked by no less integrity and high motives, was received as one of the most satisfying answers ever given from the ministerial benches in the House.

From the scene of hushed audience and approving expressions, accompanying the address of Mr. Saito, the House turned next to hear Mr. Jyuji Kasai, of the Second Lobby, who called on practically all ministers in turn on a series of questions concerning freedom of speech, diplomacy, financial policy and army.

Prize Essay a Copy, Farm Boy Admits

$5,000 Winner Calmly Drawls Story Of Using Peace Article By Newark College Head

Lloyd Lewis did not seem to understand why folks were so put out by the fact that his essay on "How Can America Stay Out of War?" which won a $5,000 scholarship in a radio contest, was copied from a magazine article written for the December issue of Peace Digest, by Dr. Frank Kingdon, president of the University of Newark, according to a recent issue in the New York Times.

Lloyd is a long-faced, grinning strippling, 18 years old, with an over-long forelock that keeps getting in his eyes. He is a junior in Plattsburg High School down on Smith's Fork of the River Platte in Missouri. He has lived all his life on a 100-acre farm near Plattsburg, doing the usual farm chores.

In the offices of Benjamin Holzman, personal representative of Eddie Cantor, the comedian, who offered the $5,000 prize, Lloyd frankly admitted that his prize-winning piece was taken more or less directly from Dr. Kingdon's article.

"I Feel Badly," Says Cantor

Mr. Holzman said that after Mr. Cantor had consulted his lawyers the name of a substitute prize winner would be announced.

"I feel badly," said Mr. Cantor. "It's a terrible thing."

The boy drawled calmly his explanation of his prize-winning effort.

"Mr. Gillian—that's my history teacher," he said, "gave us this subject, 'How to Keep America Out of War,' as part of our class work. My brother, Harry, and me have been boarding at Hetty Robertson's place in Plattsburg all Winter, on account of it's right cold out on our farm and the roads get bad.

"I see where I have to get me some material to write that essay and I asked Mrs. Robertson did she have anything and she had this magazine. She gets it all the time. I looked it over and I reckoned I might get some stuff out of it—and I did."

First, said the nonchalant prize-winner, he wrote the whole thing out in longhand.

"It was filled with lots of words that was a bit too big," he said, "and I took some of them out and put in words I thought of. I didn't think, at the time, that I'd get anywheres with it. Thought it was a good-enough piece, but I was sure they'd be better ones than that. I didn't think it was so hot."

Some one asked Lloyd about his general scholarship and he discussed that with disarming frankness. It seems his weak point is mathematics and his best subject manual training and mechanical drawing. He does pretty well in English, but nothing to boast about, he confessed.

City Amazed Farm Boy

Lloyd is one of six children of Mr. and Mrs. Logan Lewis. They help get out the grain crop. There is no livestock on the farm. Lloyd runs the tractor, but Mort, the oldest, does most of the really heavy chores.

Until he got the news that he had won the prize, Lloyd had never been more than fifty miles from the farm—a few trips to Kansas City, fifty miles to the north, and to St. Joseph. He was amazed by the New York buildings, the "Ziegfeld Follies," Helen Hayes, Rockefeller Center, the subways, taxicabs, bright lights and ocean liners.

More than 212,000 essays were submitted in the contest. Readers narrowed these down to 100 and the four judges, all college presidents, read and rated those finally submitted for their consideration. None of the manuscripts had names. They bore only numbers.

Dr. Frederick B. Robinson of City College admitted yesterday that he had rated the Kingdon-Lewis effort third. Dr. Henry Noble McCracken of Vassar College said it was not his "first choice" either; that he had remarked to some one that it seemed "as if the boy's mother had written it."

Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur of Leland Stanford University and Dr. Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago were not reached for comment.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED

Mr. and Mrs. William Gorham announced the engagement of their niece, Miss Jean Lotts who has been their house guest for the last several months, and Mr. Fritz Spiecker at a dinner party at the Gajoen Sunday evening. According to German custom, the young people exchanged plain gold band rings at the time of the announcement which also by German custom, precedes the marriage by several months. Miss Lotts and Mr. Spiecker are to be married on December 4.

Guests at the party were seated at two tables in one of the corner rooms overlooking the spacious Gajoen garden which is unusually beautiful at this time of year. Those present were in addition to the guests of honor, Mr. and Mrs. Ray G. Marshall, Captain and Mrs. A. C. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Lottz, Mr. Henry Noel, Mrs. Manko Suzuki, Mr. and Mrs. Masao Kinoshita, Miss Tsukuno, Mr. George Kattoh, Mr. J. R. Ettemday, Miss Yeta Rossanouwska, Mrs. Gwendolyn Kattoh and Mr. Don Gorham.

Defensive Pact Hinted For American Nations

instruments has a useful application in event of threatened or actual strife among the American republics, but none of them affords any basis of common action or policy in the event of an attack from a non-American country.

The Monroe Doctrine has been for a century the chief political bulwark against invasion of this continent but it has been regarded as an unilateral instrument of United States policy rather than a common responsibility and program. There is considerable political opinion in the United States that the Doctrine should be given a multilateral aspect, not necessarily through a binding pact, but through acceptance and promulgation of similar principles by all the American republics.

Although the idea of a common "diplomatic front" of the American republics toward other continents has gained wide currency, there has not been advanced in any official quarter the idea of an American continental military "alliance." Even the common interest of many republics in the security of the Panama Canal probably would not be a motive sufficiently strong to encourage regional military groupings.

On the other hand, the United States Congress has recognized the national and international interest in economic cooperation of the American republics in event of attack from abroad, and the American republics are excluded from the operation of United States arms and credit embargoes in event that one of them should be attacked by a non-American country.

The several alternatives suggested by President Roosevelt for conference consideration will not in any case be easy of solution. General ratification of the existing instruments, for example, might readily be agreed by a conference of statesmen, but the difficult matter of obtaining confirmation by the Senate or other ratifying bodies in a particular country would not yet be solved. Amendments to such pacts also would have to pass the ratification obstacle.

Diet Proceedings

ions seemed especially sharp and plain with regard to the question of constitutional government itself. When he accepted the present duty he did so with a keen sense of this particular matter of fact. All such errors he hoped to correct with the cooperation of the people at large.

Mr. Wakamiya, again, quoting a passage from the Premier's speech, asked if the latter, when he had spoken of misapplications of the constitutional law, implied a charge against parliamentarism. Mr. Hirota replied that he had meant to say that a number of regrettable developments in the past were due to misunderstanding of constitutional government. He thought that the true principle of parliamentarism was far from being understood in some parts of the Empire, though this situation would be improved with development of political thought in general.

At this point Mr. Yetsujiro Uyehara, Seiyukai, rose and stated that from the Premier's remark it seemed as if the recent unfortunate incident was a result of the people at large failing to appreciate the true principle of constitutional government, a point of view to which he took exception. The Premier then expressed himself as in perfect accord with the Seiyukai member.

The Committee rose at noon.

The plenary session of the House of Representatives opened at 1.30 o'clock. Interpellation was continued from the previous day. Mr. Nojiro Iwasaki, the first to take the rostrum, was at pains to describe how the police had abused their authority in the last general election, in not a few cases actually interfering with personal liberties.

Mr. Hisayoshi Muramatsu, Minseito, next interpellator, asked for official explanations as to how the Government, true to its promise, proposed to impart a sense of security to the people. He said the Premier's speech had given no indication how the economic misery of a section of the people would be relieved. He wished to know if there was any fundamental principle by which the Government intended to carry out its promise. The inevitable expansion in defense expenditure would result in farther flows of capital to urban districts, seriously affecting agrarian economies. How did the War Minister intend to correct such a situation? The Government was next asked whether it had any plans for revising the system of land, new tenancy legislation, agricultural administration reform, readjustment of rural finances.

With regard to the first point Mr. Hirota said that he believed he would have to approve of a state control over the national economic structure to a certain extent. As for rural finances Mr. Baba enumerated what he had done by way of reduction of the rate of interest on mortgaged farms and lands. Mr. Ogawa, Minister of Commerce and Industry, stated that while he objected to any measure destructive of the existing economic structure of the country, he believed some form of state control would be required, from time to time, in the interest of society at large. With regard to rural economy, the War Minister said that agrarian industry and labor had always been taken into consideration. Admiral Nagano, Navy Minister, added to this that so far as the Navy was concerned labor had always been sought in those parts of the country where the depressed economies were worse than at other places. With respect to the land and tenenacy questions, Mr. Shimada, Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, in substance committed himself to the effect that the Government, already making preparations for the same purposes, would submit legislative plans at an early date.

When Mr. Nobufusa Miyoshi, Seiyukai, had put a series of questions relating to agricultural conditions and received answers from the Minister concerned, the rostrum was taken by Mr. Hisashi Asoh, of Shakai Taishyu To (Socialist Party). The speaker, referring to the matter of stabilizing national life, asked the Prime Minister if he did not agree with his view that the capitalist government and its economic structure had reached a point where they were no longer capable of sustaining the life of the nation. Then having given a number of instances of economical and social contradictions in existence, Mr. Asoh wished to know if the Government really intended to carry through new policies such as tenancy legislation, state control of the electricity industry, etc. As for the professed official determination to restore discipline in the army, the speaker wished to know if the War Minister thought it would be possible to accomplish his objectives without striking at the root of what had driven the young soldiers to the action. After dwelling on the needs of reforming parliamentarism and the system of general election, Mr. Asoh concluded his speech by making protest against the official prohibition of the May Day demonstration.

The Prime Minister, taking the floor in reply, emphasized his promise to carry through reform legislation in various directions. As for the question of capitalism he said that he failed to get the point. The election law and parliamentarism would be revised, if found necessary. As for the May Day demonstration, Mr. Hirota said, "It seems to me that we shouldn't go so far in imitating the Western peoples as to take up such things as May Day." The War Minister in his turn asked that he should be given time to carry through the work on which he had embarked for disciplining the army.

Mr. Akira Kazami, of Kokumin Domeikai, next raised a number of points the most important of which was as to the possibility of placing the electricity industry under state control. Mr. Keikichi Tanomogi, Minister of Communications, who had always been known as an advocate of such an industrial scheme, plainly gave out that he had failed to see his way to any enterprise of the sort. The state administration of electric power, he stated, had been his thesis since twenty years ago. It would have been accomplished without undue difficulty so many years ago. But at present the capital investment in the industry amounted to a huge figure of 4,900 million yen. It would be very difficult to place it in the hands of the state. But in the matter of making diffusion of electricity in agricultural communities, he promised to give good attention in the future.

End Of The Ethiopian Empire

into Gojjam, the great interior province within the bend of the Blue Nile. That province, recently in full rebellion, abhors Haile Selassie as the Emperor of a spurious dynasty who destroyed its rightful chiefs.

In the center, a column from Assab near the southern exit of the Red Sea has made its way across the Danakil desert to Sardo. This force, too, has been nourished by aircraft. It will soon be able to join hands with detachments from Dessie, and presently Harar and the railway will be assallable at last from two sides, and that would be the very end. Graziani seems to be attacking in heavy strength at last; and Rome expects to hold Harar before long.

Fifth Act?—"Keeping Out the Gorgonzola."

Whether the sequel at Harar is to be swift or slow, we are at the fifth act of a staggering drama. For military purposes, the Emperor has lost the greater part of Ethiopia proper and three-fourths of the subject territories. Between Dessie and Addis Ababa he may seek to make a last rally with what is left of his Reserve Army. In the circumstances it would hardly avail him for long. Italian expectations, however high, seem firmly grounded. Haile Selassie, by his original refusal of Italian friendship, his self-exaltation, his over-clever finesse, and attempt to manipulate the League, has brought this fate on himself. The sooner he abdicates the better.

The remnants of our Sanctionists are as mistaken as before when they vociferate that the Italians owe their advantage chiefly to poison gas. These Italians owe it rather to epic road-making unmatched in military history—to air power—to mechanized transport—to machine guns and artillery—to consummate political direction and military leadership together—and to the prowess and endurance of the troops, both Europeans and Askaris.

Sanctions have doubled the force, hardness, and cohesion of the Italian people, and brought them to the top of their spirit and powers. So far, as we said, they have conquered beyond their dreams. They may well clinch the work in the next six weeks. The great rains from mid-June, as we have pointed out often, will be far more adverse to Ethiopian connections than to Italian.

For all that Geneva can do, the Duce has won his war despite the League. He will not make peace through the League. Never will he accept its tutelage. Never can the barbarous medley called the Ethiopian empire be restored to its former shape.

In Ethiopia, our Sanctionists have doomed the victims of their patronage. Through Europe they have spread mischief and danger. This is the situation four short months after the wrecking of the Hoare-Laval proposals by the stupid stampede. For ten months the British Government has pursued a policy of unique ineptitude equally inglorious and injurious. In all the annals of our diplomacy there has been nothing like it. We deeply fear that for long yet its further consequences will have to be felt and paid for. Meanwhile Ministers are at least struggling heroically to keep out the gorgonzola. Or as much of it as has not been turned already, by an unexpected chemistry of sanctions, into French green cheese.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Homing Geese

In the little Hessian village of Nieder-Morlen, Germany, a strange scene may be witnessed every evening between five and six o'clock. The thousands of geese owned by the inhabitants spend the day on the river bank below the village, and at the given signal from their leaders, make their way homeward en masse, with much pomp and circumstance and raucous noise. The strangest part of the proceeding is seen when they reach the street and, without guidance or driving, waddle each into his own yard for the night. Like so many squads, they break off from the main body and go into their owners' doors, just as though they were conscious of their own cleverness.

10-Barrel Gun

An interesting specimen in the gun collection of the Smithsonian Istitution in Washington is the 10-barrel shot gun, one of many such multi-barreled guns seized by the Bureau of Biological Survey and turned over to the Museum. The 10-barrel gun, and the others, were at one time used by duck hunters i nthe Potomac, being mounted on the bows of boats. They were operated by a single trigger for all barrels, and enabled the hunters to bring down dozens and sometimes hundreds of birds at one shot.

BERKELEY, Calif., April 11.—The University of Southern California track and field team took its first step of the Olympic year to defend coast and national championships by overwhelming the University of California today, 93 to 38.

Before 10,000 spectators, the Trojans of Coach Dean Cromwell scored clean sweeps in three events, the 220-yard dash, pole vault and broad jump and took firsts in nine others. Secondary positions also were well fortified, with the squad showing an all-around balance superior to last year's championship team.

California Team Weakened

California went into the meet weakened by the loss of such stellar performers as George Anderson, sprinter; Bob Fowler, two-miler; Bob Heavey, miler, and Paul Jacques, high jumper, all considered certain winners.

One of the upsets saw Mushy Pollock, California's second best sprinter capture the 100-yard dash in 9.7 seconds. He beat Al Fitch by a stride. The latter came back, however, to win the 220-yard dash in 21.2 seconds.

Archie Williams, fleet Negro, whom California had counted upon to win the quarter-mile, took third after he had tripped a team-mate, Greg Stout, and was forced to hurdle the latter. Harold Smallwood and Jim Cassin, Trojans, ran one, two in the event. The time was 48:3 seconds.

Cope Home in Front

The 120-yard high hurdles, rated as a wide-open competition, went to Phil Cope of Southern California, with his team-mate, Roy Staley, inches behind in second place and Tom Moore of California third by a foot. Moore tripped on the last hurdle. The time was 14.3 seconds, one-tenth slower than the world's record, which all three have tied.

Three meet records were bettered, in the high hurdles, shot-put and discus.

Cossacks Win Reserve Positions In 'Red' Army

wipe out completely the Cossack military organizations. A decree of June, 1918, placed them on a level with other Soviet citizens. But in the civil war which followed, the Bolsheviks revived Cossack military traditions and organized cavalry units which took an active part in the civil war and the Polish War. About 30,000 Cossacks joined the "whites," and left Russia after the white armies had been defeated.

"Class Warfare"

In subsequent years the Bolsheviks again disbanded Cossack military units, and introduced "class warfare" into Cossack farm villages during the long struggle to include the Cossacks in the collective farm system. A vivid picture of this period is drawn in Sholokoff's novel, "And Quiet Flows the Don." The revolution had dispossessed Cossack landowners, and this struggle disposed of Cossack "kulaks."

The collective system was not unfamiliar to Cossacks, because they had lived for centuries in communal villages, holding lands in common. Being able peasants and porsessing rich lands, the Cossack collective farm villages have regained their prosperity more quickly than some other parts of Russia. When the writer visited several of them a few months ago the Cossacks appeared content.

Opposition Broken

Although the Bolsheviks proceeded cautiously in applying their land reforms in Cossack villages, open revolts occurred in many villages when collectivization was foolishly forced during 1930-32. The Kremlin resorted to mass exile before they could restore order, moving entire villages forcibly from the Kuban valley and the North Caucasus to Siberia. Some of these villages were repopulated with demobilized Red Army soldiers.

The famine of 1932-33 broken Cossack peasant opposition to the collective system, and there has since been little trouble with them. More than 90 per cent of Cossack lands have been incorporated in collective farm villages, which have benefited particularly by the extensive introduction of agricultural machinery.

The Cossacks for centuries have combined cultivation of the soil with military service. They were called upon by the Tsars whenever need arose, inside or outside the country. Because they were used so often to suppress revolts in Russia, they gained the reputation of being "enemies of the working class" and at first were viewed with suspicion by the "proletarian dictatorship."

But the Kremlin apparently now believes that it can depend upon Cossack loyalty to the state, and has been quietly organizing Cossack cavalry units for some time in preparation for the foreign war which some Soviet leaders consider inevitable. Cossack collective peasants have been given horses and guns, and the Cossack leader Semyon Budyenny, has been made one of the seven marshals of the Red Army.

The new position of the Cossacks is therefore not far different from that which they have held for centuries. Theoretically, their status is the same as that of all other Soviet collective peasants. Actually, however, most of them have better lands to cultivate, with good private plots and houses, and, unlike most other peasants, they will be permitted private ownership of horses and possibly also of pasture land. In return, they will be available at any time for military service to the state. Military training is in the Cossack tradition, and probably is regarded as a privilege rather than a burden.

Bulgarian Rearming Warned By Metaxas

Domei

SALONICA, May 7.—A clear warning that Greece will regard eventual Bulgarian rearmament as a "hostile gesture" was voiced by Premier General John Metaxas upon his arrival here today en route back to Athens from the Balkan Entente Conference at Belgrade.

Reviewing the decisions reached by the four-Power meeting, Premier Metaxas said the conference recognized the necessity of rearming the Dardanelles and envisaged cooperative action in the event of a threat to one of the members of the Entente.

The new regime in the Straits, said Premier Metaxas, will benefit the Greek islands of Lemnos and Samothrace, while it will not disturb the territorial clauses of existing treaties.

The Premier declined to reveal what form cooperative action among the Balkan Powers in the event of an external threat will take, but he emphasized that the pact binding them together is of a defensive and not an offensive character.

The Entente parley, which was attended by representatives of Greece, Turkey, Rumania and Yugoslavia, concluded its discussions at Belgrade yesterday. A joint communique issued after the final meeting announced complete agreement on all points discussed during the three-day session.

Prague Has Made Big Changes For Better Since War

Bohemian Germans With Nazi Proclivities Big Problem For Czechoslovakia

The map of Czechoslovakia is alarming; Czechoslovakia itself is in some ways reassuring. The traveller, though confirmed in his apprehensions for a State strategically so exposed to aggrieved neighbors, sees a well-found country of a patent internal strength that justifies liberation and ensures the future while any reason remains in Europe. Bohemia was always the workshop of the old Hapsburg Empire, and in the new Republic its industries have kept pace with those of the great industrial countries. The shop windows of Prague are satifying.

Progress is in the air, in epite of the crisis. That battened-down feeling which so oppresses the sojourner in large areas of "authoritatively" ruled Europe today is practically absent in Czechoslovakia, where "disciplined democracy" prevails and minds can still be spoken, says a correspondent of the Times, London in a recent article from Prague, which continues: From a neglected provincial city, which rarely saw the Emperor, Prague has become a rising capital. It had some 650,000 inhabitants after the War; now there are nearly 1,000,000. President Benesh, greeted by the city fathers, even expressed misgivings lest Prague should outgrow Czechoslovakia. At its present rate of growth it would become topheavy, he said; 1,000,000 inhabitants should suffice, and its future development should be one of quality rather than quantity.

Even to maintain the quality of Prague is an onerous mission. Its beauty absorbs the newcomer, and discerning travellers have ranked it among the finest European cities. Today great foursquare modern buildings enfold the ancient alleys where the Golem wandered; neon tubing in the dusk limns in blue and red the fine proportions of the Wenceslas Square; by day autogiros trail advertisement pennants above the towers and spires that tell of much dynastic and religious strife.

Prague as it stands today, astride the Vltava (Moldau), centuries old, is predominantly Czech but substantially German, the product of two races and civilizations. The German contribution came mainly from the Roman Catholic South Germany, which looked for its religious and artistic inspiration to Rome and Italy and is held to be un-German and effete by the great North German Reich of today. The Leader of that Reich, incidentally, was once described by President von Hindenburg, in reference to his descent, as "a Bohemian corporal."

Herr Henlein's Party

The Bohemian Germans, with racial National Socialism clamant across the frontier, are a grave problem for Czechoslovakia. Herr Konrad Henlein, the local Fuhrer, has rallied to his Sudetendeutsche Partei 70 per cent of them, and gained more votes at the 1935 election than any other party (the Czech parties being numerous). The party's organization and methods are almost indistinguishable from those of German National Socialism. Its Press often reads like a product of the Reich Propaganda Ministry. A Henlein meeting looks like a Hitler meeting, save for swastikas and uniforms. The party's propaganda machine has the same stupendous efficiency as that of Germany National Socialism; its abundant and well-printed literature is produced in similar style; its members click their heels and address each other, not as Parteigenosse but as Kamerad.

Herr Henlein's speeches express complete loyalty to the Czechoslovak State. The present frontiers, he holds, were made by Nature and should not be changed; any rearrangement of Central European frontiers would leave as many grievances as it remedied; the Bohemian Germans demand only equal rights within the Czechoslovak Republic. But the party appeared almost overnight when the former "German National Socialist Party of Czechoslovakia" was dissolved. the Supreme Court finding that it was striving for the secession of part of Czechoslovakia to the Reich. Czechoslovak critics thus fear that affirmations of loyalty are primarily meant to forestall a ban and the attendant loss of invaluable opportunities for open political campaigning. They believe the real aim is the incorporation of at least German-speaking Bohemia (which has never belonged to North Germany) in the Reich. They think the existence of a connexion has been amply proved.

Echoes from the Reich

Thus the strongest single party in this democratic country seems to be ineligible for the Government coalition, an unfortunate thing. But the adversaries of the Henlein Party assert that it gainsays within the German community those democratic principles which it professes to accept for the State. It claims to be the sole accredited negotiator of the Bohemian Germans. The German Clerical, Socialist, and Agrarian parties, however, retain some seats; the Socialists and Agrarians are in the coalition.

The party opposes a foreign policy which the overwhelming majority of the population has consistently approved. Advocating a foreign policy "not anti-German," it maintains that the Czechoslovak-Soviet pact has established a Franco-Czechoslovak-Russian front against Germany. This is but the echo of the Reich Press, and the Czechoslovaks recall that Germany has chosen to remain outside this system of security pacts; they find it strange that the big man, who feels his biceps ominously at his smaller neighbors, should plaintively cry that he is being threatened when the small men huddle together for protection. Similarly, the Henlein Press angrily attacks the current efforts to improve relations between Austria and Czechoslovakia and to bring about a Danubian Entente. The whole implication of its utterances is that Czechoslovakia should in foreign policy be the docile train-bearer of the Reich and in return for that probably nothing very unpleasant would happen to her.

The party, like the Nazis in Germany in pre-office days, is concentrating its strength on "misery propaganda," with glowing accounts of conditions in Germany for contrast. The misery unfortunately exists. Czechoslovakia is better situated than many States. She has a balanced Budget, no excessive debt, a substantial trade balance; she is not bankrupt, and though she may be living, economically, from hand to mouth during the crisis she is not, like some, living by sleight of hand. But unemployment approaches a million heads, in a population of 15,000,000, and is worst in the German districts. Supported by the Reich Press, the spotlight of unremitting publicity is focused on them. They are alleged to be cold-shouldered in the distribution of official contracts.

The German minority, unlike minorities elsewhere, is able to state its grievances, for democracy is real. At Bodenbach, some miles inside the frontier, hundreds of uniformed and even besworded German Customs officers and railwaymen may be seen. They are there in virtue of an ancient Hapsburg agreement. Europe might be searched in vain for a comparable sight. Official Prague realizes that the German complaints of inadequate representation in State employment are justified. But racial National Socialism complicates such problems. Employment in State service and the security of the State are interrelated matters, and the State hesitates to make appointments when any doubt about the candidate's attitude towards the State exists.

The minorities of the former masters are clamorous, and are supported from their parent States. The frontiers, strategically so vulnerable, are by them further weakened from within. Wellwishers of Czechoslovakia often wonder whether the new State did not bite off more Germans than she could chew at the peace Conference. But the Bohemian frontiers are ancient, historic and natural; and the Germans themselves claim not to dispute them.

HUNGARIAN EXHIBITION

An exhibition of Hungarian art and handicrafts will be opened at the Matsuzakaya department store, Ginza, from May 18 to 25 to the public. Several hundred local production which have striking local Hungarian colors and forms will be shown. This is the second Hungarian art exhibition in Tokyo in the last four years, the former having been held at Uyeno. The coming exhibition was organized under the direction of the Tokyo Nichi Nichi and with the patronage of the Spanish Minister to Japan.

The exhibits were especially collected and selected by the Director of the National Art Institute of Hungary purposely to send to Japan. Hence the handicrafts and handmade wooden wares, potteries, textiles and dolls are indeed artistic and exotic new things to Japanese. In this connection, Madam and Miss Brunner, Hungarian painters who came to Japan last year, will exhibit their paintings representing scenes in Hungary. The exhibition room is on the 7th floor of the department store.

Besides the exhibition room, Carda, a Hungarian cafe, will be opened to the visitors during the exhibition. In it people will be able to enjoy real Hungarian wine and dishes. The interior furnishings and ornaments are set in real Hungarian style and manner.

Among things which are to be shown at the exhibition, the prettiest are handmade dolls, small jewelry boxes, inkstands, powder boxes, pincase, cendrier and small flower vases, table center pieces and textiles. These works are decorated with the patterns of traditional Hungarian style and forms, the brilliant colors being striking and beautiful. The handmade dolls wearing Hungarian local costumes are charming. They show the daily life and customs of the country. At the entrance of the show, a large panorama screen depicts the Hungarian countryside and several pictures and photographs represent Hungarian life.

The opening ceremony of the exhibition was held at 11 a.m. today and the show will be opened specially for guests on Sunday. To the public it will be opened on Monday, and will continue to May 25. However, there will be no exhibition on May 18, the holiday of the Federation of Department Stores of Tokyo. We believe that this exhibition will establish the goodwill relation between Japan and Hungary through the art, and people who visit the exhibition will appreciate the elaborate works made by the farmers and local artisans of Hungary. French Waver From League, Would Curb It the League, which, in French eyes, has shown itself to be rather a weak reed in a crisis.

In fact, the League has seemed to many Frenchmen to be a liability since, caught in the wheel of the machinery of the Covenant, the French have been obliged to participate in the sanctions against Italy, thereby alienating a useful ally that Laval had won by his trip to Rome in 1935.

France Still Woos British

The campaign is now strong for the French to wash their hands of sanctions and thereby regain Italian support against the Reich. The French hesitation to do so is not caused by love for the League, but by the fear of losing the friendship of Great Britain, whose support is still regarded by most Frenchmen as more valuable in the long run than the somewhat doubtful backing of Italy.

The general staff conversations between Great Britain and France, which began in London this week, and the promise given by the British government to aid France if this country is attacked by Germany are considered by Paris to be indeed a partial but a nevertheless valuable compensation for the loss of security afforded by the demilitarized Rhine zone.

But even those Frenchmen who think that the League of Nations should be preserved are agitating for its reform. They believe that the Ethiopian conflict has demonstrated that the League should confine its operations to Europe, and not attempt to halt war in other countries. In support of this contention this group points to the failure of the League to prevent Japan's conquest of Manchuria and the inability of sanctions to prevent Premier Benito Mussolini from swallowing up Ethiopia.

The League reformers argue that the outstanding defect of the League today is its lack of universality, and that while it includes four of seven great powers (and one of these powers, Italy, is virtually outside the Geneva fold), it cannot be expected to make good the rifts in other countries. Especially, reformers add, the absence of the United States and the inability to obtain American cooperation in the imposition of sanctions render it impossible for the League to take effective measures to prevent wars in other parts of the world.

Better a limited League confined to Europe, where it would work efficiently, argue reformers, than a more ambitious world organization which, lacking power and means to make its decrees obeyed, becomes merely a subject for derision and ridicule on the part of the aggressor states.

Nazi Loyalty Is Required Of Reich Soldiers' Brides

The German Ministry of War has issued a new marriage ordinance for all members of the armed forces.

This, according to the New York Times, provides:

First, the bride must not be Jewish nor have any Jewish blood.

Second, proper financing of the household without interfering with the duties of the husband in the armed forces shall be assured.

Third, the bride and bridegroom shall both be free of debt.

Fourth, the bride shall be of good moral character and true to the State, and her family must also enjoy a reputation for loyalty to the Nazi administration.

Arms Trade Corrupts Govts., Says Report

dies from interested business.

Charges Political Activity

"The committee also finds," the report continues, in part, "that the Navy League together with various navy officials have engaged in political activity looking toward the defeat of congressmen unfavorable to Navy League and navy views.

"The committee finds, further that any close association between munitions and supply companies on the one hand and the service departments on the other . . . constitutes an unhealthy alliance in that it brings into being a self-interested political power which operates in the name of patriotism and satisfies interests which are, in large part, purely selfish, and that such associations are an inevitable part of militarism, and are to be avoided in peace times at all costs."

The committee repeats its earlier recommendation for establishment of a "munitions control board" in the State Department.

In World Patents Pool

The committee finds that American munitions companies have cooperated with the international armaments pool in exchanging patents, and that "international commercial interests of such large organizations as du Pont and Imperial Chemical Industries may precede in the minds of these companies the importance of national policy as described publicly by the Foreign Office or State Department."

"Such considerations of commercial interest," says the report, "were apparently foremost in the rearming of Germany beginning in 1924 and in the sale of a process which could be used to manufacture cheaper munitions in Japan in 1932, shortly after Secretary of State Stimson had taken steps to express the disapproval of this nation for Japan's military activities in Manchoukuo.

Several aviation companies also licensed Japan for the use of their material in Manchoukuo at a time when the United States Government refused recognition to it. Recognition by munitions companies may be far more important than diplomatic recognition.

Danger In License System

"The committee finds that the licensing of American inventions to allied companies in foreign nations is bound to involve in some form the recurrence of experiences similar to those in the last war in which Electric Boat Company patents were used in German submarines and aided them in the destruction of American lives and ships, and that in peacetime the licensing involves the manufacture abroad, at lower costs, of American material."

In another section, the committee finds that there is, at present, "no effective control over munitions activities of the commercial chemical industry."

The committee report is accompanied by a 17-page synopsis, the major portion of which deals with findings of facts in specific activities of the American munitions trade in Latin America and elsewhere; appended to which are the majority and minority recommendations.

Played One Against Another

"Colombia and Peru, at the time of the Leticia incident, were each kept well informed by the munitions companies of the proposed purchases of the other nation. The evidence of the Colt agent in Peru was that the Vickers' agent, after unloading a huge armament order in Peru, had boasted to the Peruvians that he would sell "double the amount, and more modern, to the Colombian Government." When a limited amount of material, such as machine guns, was available, Bolivia could be forced into ordering them on the threat that unless she acted quickly, Paraguay would get them.

Killing the back-country Indians of South America with airplanes, bombs, and machine guns boiled down to an order to get busy because "these opera bouffe revolutions are usually short-lived, and we must make the most of the opportunity."

The Game in China

In China the munitions companies report that there was a certain amount of feeling between the Central (Nanking) Government and the Canton Government. The Boeing agent was able to sell 10 planes to the Canton Government. Referring to the Nanking (recognized) Government he wrote:

"Their anger at us in selling airplanes to the Cantonese is more than offset by the fact that the Cantonese have gotten ahead of them and will have better equipment than they will have. In other words, the Canton sale is quite a stimulant to the sale up here.'"

Commenting on the incident, the Nye committee says:

"All this may be little more to the munitions people than a highly profitable game of bridge with special attention on all sides to the technique of the 'squeeze' play, but to a considerable part of the world's inhabitants there is still something frightful in death by machinery, and the knowledge that neighboring governments have acquired the latest and fastest engines of destruction leads to suspicion that those engines are meant to be used and are not simply for play and show."

firmly determined to control Austria, including an efficient regular army, and would pursue the course of a Christian authoritarian State with more resolution than ever.

Schuschnigg Cabinet Formed

Following the cabinet meeting, the Schuschnigg Government resigned en bloc and a new cabinet under the chancellorship of Dr. Schuschnigg came into official existence at 3 a.m. today.

Chancellor Schuschnigg now holds the portfolios of foreign affairs, home and national defense, while Major E. Baar-Baarenfels Home Minister in the previous Schuschnigg Ministry, was appointed Vice-Chancellor, replacing Prince von Starhemberg, who has been ousted from the cabinet.

Political circles opined that the sweeping cabinet reconstruction marks the victory of Dr. Schuschnigg's Democratic Catholic Party over Fascist groups led by Prince von Starhemberg. This also means, they added, the first defeat of the idea of fascism in Austria.

A Government communique, issued later in the morning, explained that the former Vice-Chancellor left the cabinet owing to personal differences of opinion with Chancellor Schuschnigg. It is generally known, however, that the breach is due to the fact that the Chancellor's conception of a guild State based on Democratic principles has clashed with Prince von Starhemberg's Fascist ideas. It is also known that the ousted Vice-Chancellor was opposed to the proposed demilitarization of the Heimwehr.

7 Italians Sentenced As Revolutionarics

Italian officials announced recently that ten Piedmont intellectuals, headed by Professor Michele Giua, have been arrested and charged with forming an association to overthrow the State.

Seven of the ten were convicted and sentenced and three were acquitted. Professor Giua received a ten-year prison sentence, says the New York Times

The anti-Fascist newspaper Giustiza Liberta published a list of ten Piedmont intellectuals sentenced to a total of 121 years in jail by an Italian secret tribunal for "active propaganda against the Fascist regime," says a Paris report.

The newspaper also said seventeen "unidentified laborers employed by Regio Emilia" were sentenced to a total of 102 years.

Chile's Nitrate Exports Reflect Munitions Boom

Figures for nitrate shipments from Chilean mines through the Panama Canal to European and Eastern United States ports showed a steady monthly increase since October, indicating, say experts, a boom in munitions manufacture, says a report from Cristobal to the New York Herald Tribune recently.

From 48,566 tons in October, nitrate shipments climbed to 150,776 tons in March. Of this amount, all but three shipments were consigned for United States ports.

Only 14,100 tons were consigned for trans-Atlantic shipment to the Azores, indicating that Italy, a leading nitrate importer during the early months of her East African campaign, had dropped to a minor second.

ANNUAL MEETING

The annual meeting of the Japan Humane Society will be held at 3 p.m. Thursday, May 28 at the Japan Industrial club, 2, 1-chome, Marunouchi.

The Japan Humane Society (Nippon Jindo Kai) was organized in 1914 in order to draw public attention to the welfare of animals, and to relieve the unnecessary suffering of animals caused by ignorance and indifference of men.

Ever since these early days the society has endeavoured for the benefit of animals:—education of children, introduction of drinking troughs, publication of literature, establishment of shelters for stray and unwanted animals, improvements of City Dog Pounds and of the police regulation, organizing the "Humane Week" every year, etc.

Education of children especially has never been lost sight of and the society has laid special stress on this subject, guided by the firm belief that the work carried on for the receptive minds and hearts of children would later on bear rich fruits of sympathy and affection towards their fellow-men and towards animals.

In January 1936, the Society acquired a well-qualified speaker who began to go round primary Schools and Kindergartens to interest children and to encourage them to organize "Bands of Mercy."

Miss Akita, who has undertaken the work of delivering lectures in schools on the humane treatment of animals recently presented her program for the ensuing year to the Executive committee which heartily approved of her scheme.

Her plans are:

To make one set of Kami Shibai each term. To Arrange meetings at Primary Schools, kindergartens, etc.

To compose animal stories and send them to newspapers, magazine publishers and J.O.A.K.

To arrange Essay competitions and exchange of compositions by children.

To prepare suggestions for the Education Department for improvement of the National Readers.

RESIGNS POSITION

Miss J. Mac Farlane, Principal of the Yokohama International School, has resigned her position, effective at the end of the present term. She will be succeeded by the Rev. R. P. Pott. The annual general meeting of the school will be held at 5:30 p.m. Wednesday when reports on policy and proposed changes will be discussed.

Socialism Seen Nearer As U.S. Adds To Pay Roll

as great as in 1927?

State Enterprises Unprofitable

The difficulty with every state-owned enterprise is that it is not compelled to meet the acid test of turning out products which can be marketed above cost. For example, under government auspices a splendid travel guide for the United States might be produced and distributed at a cost of $500,000. Perhaps 50,000 copies could be sold at a price of $2 each, making a total of $100,000 receipts and $400,000 loss. Obviously, a private publisher would not knowingly engage in such a losing enterprise.

A city golf course may be improved at a cost of $300,000, and the annual revenue therefrom may be increased by not more than $3,000. The officials in charge do not worry, for the cost has not come out of their pockets. Undoubtedly the work in the national forests being done by the C. C. C. is useful. Will the cost be covered by additional production and sale of forest products? This question is not likely even to be raised seriously by those responsible for the work.

Under competition the concern which cannot sell its products for enough to cover all costs soon becomes bankrupt and gives way to its competitors. Government, however, does not need to meet this test. It may borrow as long as any one will lend to it and then repudiated its debts either directly or by the currency inflation route. In 1916 it cost $734,000,000 to run our Federal government, and we taxpayers all felt that amount to be more than ample. In 1935, only nineteen years later, the cost has risen to $7,376,000,000, or ten times as much, although population had increased but 27 per cent and the price level was not markedly altered.

Debt Grows at Alarming Rate

In 1916, the nation's gross debt was only $1,225,000,000. The World War, of course, brought a huge increase. However, by 1930, it had been reduced to $16,185,000,000. At present, it is more than $31,000,000,000, having nearly doubled in six years, and is growing still at a rate of nearly $2,000,000,000 a year. With such glaring examples of governmental inefficiency both in the field of production and the field of finance, facing us on every hand, is it remarkable that many citizens continue to view with alarm the rapid advance of socialism in the United States?

Italy and Russia furnish the only examples of economic planning which can be cited as being even moderately successful and, in both instances, the systems are operated by despotisms which have eliminated all but the barest traces of representative government. May not the elimination of democracy be the secret of such success as they have attained?

Viewing with alarm, however, does little to stop the forward movement of government control of industry. Through loans and stock ownership railways and banks are gradually being brought under governmental influence. Now a heavy tax on corporate surplus is to be installed. Presumably, this is not intended merely as a means of raising revenue, but is mainly a device to weaken the corporations in the next depression, thus forcing them to seek aid from the government and thus subject themselves to governmental domination.

Manchoukuo's Opium Monopoly Progresses

cials inherited by the new state from the former warlord regime were engaged in opium transactions and it was exceedingly difficult at first to eliminate this evil practice especially when particular officials occupied high posts.

Peace and Order

Simultaneously with the gradual stabilization of peace and order in the new State, suppression of banditry, reorganization of police forces and regeneration of the Manchurian official class the opium monopoly showed considerable progress. Necessary adjustments in the monopoly estimates and methods of work, as well as efforts of its staff, bore fruit, and the monopoly revenue from July 1934 to June 1935 reached the amount of 5,000,000 yuan or one million over the estimated income for that period.

Though exact figures for the fiscal period from July 1935 up to the end of December of the same year were not available at the time of writing, it is expected that the actual receipts from the opium monopoly will be 2,000,000 yuan more than estimates for the period. The estimated revenue for the current fiscal year from January 1, 1936 was 8,000,000 yuan and it is hoped that it will be well balanced at the end of this year.

Taking into consideration the fact that if the monopoly price for raw opium is high the farmers will be apt to cultivate the poppy at the expense of other crops, the present policy is to buy the opium paste produced by the poppy growers at a very low price in order to discourage poppy cultivation, and to sell the prepared opium manufartured by the government at a very high price to reduce the number of those who can afford the high cost of smoking.

In his analysis of the opium question in Manchuria, written a few years ago, Dr. S. Kubota, professor of pharmacology of the Manchuria Medical College and now its president, says that the opium paste manufactured by the government for the supply to consumers is to be of the standard efficacy. By the fixed amount of efficacy is principally meant the uniform amount of morphine content. The necessity of maintaining the uniform amount of efficacy of opium paste is quite obvious: if an opium addict takes opium paste of varying efficacy he becomes accustomed to the stronger and increases by degrees his daily portion.

Morphine Content

The morphine content in raw opium varies according to the places of poppy growing, and consequently the morphine content in the manufactured opium paste varies too. If it exceeds the standard limit it needs dilution by applying saccharine, wheat flour, vegetable oil or vegetable extracts, which can be used singly or mixed. The proportion and method of application of these vary, those of kindred color, density and taste to opium being the best suitable.

It seems that a gradual and each time almost imperceptible decrease of morphine content in the opium paste prepared by the government is another way towards a gradual cure of opium addicts or at least a gradual diminution of their propensity to the malignant nature of opium.

The International Opium Conference has recommended the government monopoly as a means of opium control, for no public institution however good and useful can be entrusted with the opium business. Only the government which has proper efficiency and power is in a position to and ought to undertake this task.

After 15 years of perfect enforcement of the anti-opium system, Prof. Kubota maintains, a remarkable decrease in the number of addicts will be noted, and in the course of 20 to 30 years' ministration to the remnant the last victim of the opium vice will disappear.

Derivative from opium narcotics, like morphine, heroin and others, which have an immense army of addicts and the production and usage of which is very difficult to control, constitute another problem connected with the opium monopoly. Whether these narcotics have to be also monopolized or their production to be entirely prohibited and ruthlessly eliminated are questions which have still to be solved.

American Breaks Olympic Record In The Decathlon

N. Y. Herald-Tribune

LAWRENCE, Kan., April 18.—One world record was broken, the Olympic decathlon mark bettered and an intercollegiate record tumbled as 10,000 spectators watched a preview of United States track and field hopefuls in the fourteenth annual Kansas relays here today.

The meet also marked the 1936 outdoor debut of Glenn Cunningham, former University of Kansas runner and holder of the world mile record. Cunningham won his event, the 1,500 meters, in the comparatively slow time of 3:57.1, but provided no answer to the question of whether his best days are before or behind him.

The meet and decathlon records were bettered by a sturdy Fort Collins, Col., automobile salesman, Glenn Morris. Competing under the colors of the Denver Athletic Club, Morris rolled up the impressive total of 7,576 points in his first try at the decathlon.

The Olympic record of James Bausch, set in 1932, translated into the new scoring system is 7,392 points. The meet record, also set by Bausch in 1932, and similarly translated, is 7,465.

Four events new to the relays were run, the winners automatically setting new marks.

The excitement created by announcement of Morris's feat scarcely had faded before the fans were thrilled by a major record-shattering performance.

The Emporia, Kan., Teachers College distance medley relay quartet, anchored by Archie San Romani, national intercollegiate mile champion, raced through its variety of distances in 10:12.7. The world and American record is 10:14, set by Manhattan College, of New York, in 1933.

Northwestern's sprint medley relay team of Heg, Millett, Keitel and Fleming covered that event in 3:27.4 to shatter by two-tenths of a second the intercollegiate record performance of Ohio State in 1931. Texas was second to Northwestern.

Three New Events Listed

Three meet records were established in events appearing on the program for the first time because of their connection with the Olympic tryout—the 400-meter hurdles, the 3,000-meter steeplechase and the hop, step and jump.

The fourth record established was in the one-mile team race, which replaced the four-mile university relay.

Nelson, of Oklahoma, won the 400-meter hurdles in 55.4 seconds. Deckard, of Indiana, won the steeplechase in 9:20.4. Lloyd Cardwell, of Nebraska, set the hop, step and jump mark at 46 feet 9¾ inches. Indiana won the mile team race in 4:23.3, three of the Hoosiers' four runners finishing in a dead heat.

The meet failed to develop the record-cracking orgy of last year, when eight marks fell. H. W. (Bill) Harriss, Kansas coach who developed Cunningham, attributed this to the slight chill in the air and the fact that cold weather has hampered the athletes in their training.

Morris Surprises Favorites

The chill acted as a blast from a blow torch to Glenn Morris, who came to Lawrence dimmed by the presence of such sports notables as Jay Berwanger, of Chicago; Don Elser, of Notre Dame, and Clyde Coffman, of Topeka, Kans., defending decathlon champion.

When Morris won the 100-meter dash, first event on the decathlon program, yesterday in 10.6 seconds, only three-tenths of a second slower than world record time, there was a lifting of eyebrows.

He followed with a fourth place in the broad jump, a second in the shot-put, a tie for second in the high jump and a best time in the 400 meters to end the first day's competition with a substantial lead.

With three stern field events coming up today, it was believed he would falter. He won two of the field events, tied for third in the other, won one of the running events and was second in the other. He earned a tie with ten others by pole vaulting 11 feet 2 inches, six inches higher than he ever had done before. Fate evened that up by giving him a discus mark of approximately 135 feet. He has done 145.

Holy Cross Nips Dartmouth, 12-11

N. Y. Herald-Tribune

WORCESTER, Mass., April 18.—Holy Cross defeated Dartmouth in a weird ball game today, 12 to 11, opening the regular season.

Both coaches started their first-string pitchers, but soon had to send in relief. Dartmouth scored a run in the second, but Holy Cross netted a pair in its half of the inning. The Crusaders pushed over four runs in the third for a real lead and added another in the fourth.

The Indians got back in the ball game in the fifth, registering a pair of runs. In the sixth the Dartmouth artillery moved into action, registered five hits and sent over three runs. Three more runs were added in the seventh to put Dartmouth in front and two more were added in the eighth. Holy Cross, however, reduced the lead to two runs and Ed Canty cleaned the sacks with a double to deep center for the victory.

Reich Needs One Billion Marks Of Extra Revenue

Domei

BERLIN, May 12—A warning that Germany must have one billion marks of extra revenues this year was voiced by Dr. Fritz Reinhardt, state secretary of the Reich Finance Ministry, in an address before a congress of financial officials today.

Secretary Reinhardt told the congress that Germany's fiscal revenues showed an increase of 2,600,000,000 marks last year but that the present figure still remained insufficient to meet new government disbursements.

that of President Eusebio Ayala, started to select a candidate. Franco protested the regime was planning to perpetuate itself.

He became the Presidential candidate of a group of war veterans and students, was dismissed from the army and exiled. Within two weeks Franco's army followers had overthrown Ayala, and called Franco home. This time he did not protest.

Her Leap Year Idea

A novel method of obtaining a husband was adopted by a woman at Beni Souef, Upper Egypt. She paraded the streets of the town distributing to lively looking men leaflets "advertising" herself—much to the astonishment of the men.

Her leaflet read:—

"A woman of good family, born in Mehalla El Kobra, Lower Egypt, aged 35, divorced three months ago, possessing property and having documents to prove these facts, desires to marry an honest man of good family."

EARLY MISSIONARY TO JAPAN DIES

Word has just been received of the death of Miss Julia Ann Eliza Gulick in Honolulu on May 2. She was a missionary of the American Board in Japan from 1874 to 1908.

The memorial service was conducted by Dr. H. H. Leavitt in the Central Union Church. The entire service was very beautiful, the music consisting of two hymns sung by a choir of some thirty girls from the Japanese Children's Home in which Miss Gulick had been much interested from its very beginning some three decades ago. The hymns sung in Japanese were—'Nearer My God to Thee' and 'In the Sweet Bye and Bye'. The interment took place in the Mission Cemetery, just back of the old Kawaiahou church, where only missionaries of the first generation and their immediate children have been buried.

Miss Gulick was born in Honolulu June 5, 1845. She was the only daughter and the youngest child of Rev. and Mrs. Peter Johnson Gulick who came to Hawaii as missionaries of the American Board in 1828.

As the youngest member of the family she began early to receive instructions from her seven older brothers, each one of whom counted her as his only sister and his special charge.

Between the age of 11 and 15, Julia Gulick studied in Punahou school. After that, for three years she attended private schools in New York City and in Philadelphia.

Returning to Honolulu in 1863, she became an occasional teacher in Kawaiaho Seminary and in the Wailalua schools for girls until 1874 when she received full appointment as a missionary of the American Board to Japan. Accompanied by her parents, she then moved to Kobe, joining her brother, Orramel Gulick and his wife who were already in service there.

In addition to the usual routine of missionary work, Miss Gulick so perfected herself in the use of the Japanese language that, through superintending various translations from English into Japanese, she made distinct contribution to the growing Christian literature of the country. Especially successful was the translation of the famous small book, "Line upon Line," which received a very wide circulation.

After 25 years of Christian service in Japan, and after the death of both parents, who received their final resting-place in the mission cemetery in Kobe, Miss Gulick was called back to Hawaii by the Woman's Board of Missions of Hawaii. The convincing argument in favor of her return was the fact that she now had good command of both the Japanese and the Hawaiian languages, and that both were essential in the Christian work which needed to be done in Hawaii.

At the age of 75, Miss Gulick withdrew from active missionary life. But until she passed away, she continued her interest in the Japanese Children's Home.

Monsieur Thibaud

ARRIVES TODAY

Monsieur Jacques Thibaud, well known French violinist, is to arrive in Tokyo at 3:25 p.m. today. He will give a series of recitals in Tokyo from May 26 to June 2 and will appear at the Saint Saens's Memorial festival which is to be held in Tokyo during his stay.

Monsieur Jacques Thibaud was born in Bordeaux, France. His musical talent was apparent at the age of 4, when he played at a public concert. He studied piano under his father and then went to Paris to enter the Academy of Music. He was awarded the First Prize at the musical competition of the Academy of Music of Paris.

At the beginning of his career, he was a violinist at a cafe concert where his unusual talent was estimated by musicians and critics and he was received by the Concert Colone de Paris as its chief conductor.

Monsieur Thibaud's fame is worldwide. This is his second visit to Japan.

CHAPLIN HERE

Mr. Charles Chaplin, world famous comedian and his party arrived in Tokyo at 8:35 p.m. Monday. He is at he Imperial Hotel.

GARDEN PARTY

One of the most enjoyable social affairs of the spring was the garden party which Mayor Torataro Ushizuka and Mrs. Ushizuka gave for members of the diplomatic circle Monday afternoon at Kiyozumi park, Fukagawa ward. Other guests included officials of the Imperial household, the Foreign Office, municipal officers of Tokyo and Yokohama, prominent members of the international colony and well known Japanese.

After being received by Mayor and Mrs. Ushizuka in the villa at the entrance of the garden, the guests strolled through the park which was beautiful in the bright afternoon sun. Once the garden of Baron Iwasaki, the park which now belongs to the city is one of the most attractive municipal landscapes in Japan. It is built around a lake, set with an abundance of green foliage, many winding stone paths and wide rock slabs.

Free State Holds Firm In Defense Of Language

curriculum. In the infant and first standards schools, in which more than 200,000 children are enrolled, instruction is altogether in Irish, irrespective of the area in which the school is situated. In the higher standards Irish has to be taught as a subject for at least an hour a day in each school, and, in addition, other subjects are to be taught through the medium of Irish as far as possible. In some schools all subjects are taught through the medium of Irish, but English is included as a subject.

English Taught as Subject

The preparatory colleges established about 11 years ago to provide candidates for the teachers training colleges are unilingual colleges, with Irish as a language of instruction and English taught as a subject. The training colleges for teachers also do a great part of their work through the medium of Irish now.

Postprimary or vocational classes have been formed within the past few years, and are conducted under the branch of the educatoinal committee which has charge of technical instruction.

Irish is also a subject of instruction under this scheme, and in some counties, notably in Cork and Wexford, there is a network of classes for young men and young women, in which work is done in the Irish language.

In these two counties there is a summer course every year for students of the winter classes, who obtained scholarships as a result of the winter study, and others who have studied Irish, but have not obtained scholarships. Irish is also taught in the evening classes in the technical school through the winter and in some areas it is used for teaching technical subjects.

Required in Civil Service

Although English is spoken and heard on all hands, and in all departments of the Government, a knowledge of Irish is required of all persons entering the civil service. A knowledge of Irish is also required for many appointments in the service of the local authorities.

Firm in its belief that the Irish language is an essential element of Irish nationality, the Government is providing all financial assistance possible to permit the preservation of the language as a living speech in Irish-speaking areas.

Irish survives as a community language only in the rural districts, and only along the southern and western seaboards of the island. (In no urban area, however small, is Irish the ordinary language of intercourse between the people.

Vernacular Area Shrinks

Notwithstanding great efforts made within the past 30 years to preserve Irish and extend its use as a spoken tongue, the vernacular area has been gradually shrinking and an effort is being made to combat the downward tendency in this direction. Bonuses at the rate of £2 each have been paid to pupils knowing Irish when going to school, providing that the home language of the children continued to be Irish.

Critics of the Government's program declare that Irish retards the people's intellectual development.

Diet Proceedings

plated taxation legislation he warned that the Government should not attempt to increase national revenue at the expense of the economic power of the nation. Foreign trade and munition industry had expanded of late, but only a small section of the community had been benefited thereby. National policy should be so directed that national prosperity could be shared by the majority of the people. To make the economic development of the country possible it would be more effectual to let people work out their own problems rather than to resort to measures subversive of the existing system or indiscriminately place it under the control of state. Pointing out the inadequate nature of agricultural legislation, the need of coordinating the munition industries with agriculture and general industrial activities of the country, he concluded by emphasizing the importance of laying down long-range principles in budgetary considerations on next occasion.

The opposition was next represented by Mr. Akira Kazami, of Kokumin Domei, who insisted upon returning the budget to the Ministry without vote. The present Ministry, as it stood, could mean no good to the state, he said. The Ministers should have considered all reformative measures which the nation had expected to be so shown that they would know on what lines they should proceed. As for the disciplining of the army it would be a matter of first importance to bring about such conditions as to make the attempt possible. In conclusion the Government was strongly criticized for its diplomatic and agricultural policies.

Mr. Hajime Mori, of Showa Kai, next briefly spoke in favor of the bills. Then put to vote, the bills were passed by a large majority. The meeting adjourned at 8:55 p.m.

The Committee on the Government bills for disposal of silk cocoons held its final meeting in the morning, continuing its session into the afternoon. The bills were finally voted without amendment, though the Committee found it necessary to pass a collateral resolution to the effect that the Government should submit at the next Diet some concrete plans as to the control of sale of silk for exports. The Committee also drafted four items as expressive of its attitude toward future official policy as regards the sericultural industry and the economic relief of people engaged in silk reeling on small scales.

At the meeting of the Fourth Sub-Committee on the Budget, General Terauchi, War Minister, when questioned on the bill for control of peace-disturbing literature, gave intimation of his readiness to consider some modication of the lines on which it is drafted. The bill as it stands sanctions official procedure against what would be regarded as "causing disturbance to the public peace, to discipline of the military service, and to financial circles". In reply to the questions of a Socialist and an opposition member the War Minister said that he would consider the matter of clearly defining the heads under which such offence would be proceeded against.

Sunday, May 17

House of Peers

In view of a brief period of time in which a number of bills are still to be considered, the House of Peers met this morning punctually on time, at 10:16 o'clock, though Sunday, to open its business on the budgetary bills just transferred from the lower House. Mr. Babá, Minister of Finance, taking the rostrum, addressed the House with regard to the financial bills, explaining his general policy as done previously in the lower House.

This was followed by Count Chuko Sakai, Chairman of the Petitions Committee, who reported on the results of business conducted under his charge.

Next, the three Government bills relating to the sericultural industry were brought up in a group for discussion, with Mr. Shimada, Minister of Commerce and Trade, explaining on behalf of the Government.

The House then proceeded to hear the report of the chairman of the Disciplinary Committee on the case of Mr. Tsumura. In accordance with the law of the House of Peers, Prince Konoe declared a secret session. When the House resumed its open session at 11 o'clock, Prince Konoe formally announced the closing of the Disciplinary Committee.

The House then entered into discussion of ministerial policy. Mr. A. Akaike, pointing out recent developments in western parts of China and foreign credit operations in the same country, said that the Nanking Government was still enlisting the support of European and American countries. The Ministry was asked to indicate what policy would be followed toward China. Mr. Hirota, Prime Minister, in reply stated that although the Imperial Government was emphasizing a good neighbor policy toward China and Soviet, there were not a few things to be remedied in Japan's relations with these countries. The situation would have to be met with tact and judgment. As to the recent attitude of the Nanking Government, the Premier said that although there were versions of its changed diplomatic front, he did not think that Nanking was embarking on any new anti-Japanese policy. Foreign activities in China were of an economic character in most part. He had no knowledge how far the Chinese authorities were connected. As a matter of first importance, the Japanese people themselves should cultivate true friendship with the Chinese people.

Mr. Arita, Foreign Minister, also replying to the question, stated that the present situation as regards Soviet was a result of the latter's failure to appreciate the true conditions in the Far East, and her suspicious interpretations of the situation in the same part of the world, a point which the Imperial Government should bear in mind in dealing with that country. Admitting that there might be detected some visible change in the recent attitude of China, the Foreign Minister thought that such change was due to recent developments in North China. Corroborating the Premier's speech, Mr. Arita emphasized the importance of friendship between the peoples of Japan and China, if these countries expected to be brought closer together.

Baron Yoshiitsu Asada, next interpellator, referring to the speech of Mr. Ryuo Saito in the House of Representatives, questioned the War Minister as to a series of points with which the War Minister, he said, seemed to have be in agreement, though the member should take exception thereto. The War Minister was asked if he did not think that the soldiery, being charged with national defense, ought to interest themselves in politics. Mr. Saito had asserted that the military people were not qualified to discuss politics or economics. Though no experts on such subjects, were they not fairly well informed as compared with ordinary people? Mr. Saito had also stated that the last military incident was due to the deplorable fact that the "May 15 incident" had not been properly dealt with by the authorities, a statement to which the War Minister had made no reference in any of his addresses in the Diet. Did it mean that the Minister had admitted the truth of the assertion?

General Terauchi, replying to the member's question, stated that he had not answered Mr. Saito's statement point for point, believing that some of the points raised by the member had been made clear by the explanations he had offered on other occasions in the Diet. As for the participation in politics of military authority, the War Minister explained that he had given his view as to the technical bases on which the soldier was not permitted to interest himself in politics. But that any institution of military administration, such as the War Office, takes up political issues from the point of view of national defense and consider them up in connection with other departments of government was both necessary and proper.

Baron Asada again took the rostrum and questioned the War Minister on technical points as to the matter of order and obedience in military service. Upon the Minister's reply, the House concluded interpellation and adjourned at 12:30 o'clock.

In the afternoon the Budget Committee of the House of Peers met in its first plenary session at 1:40 o'clock. Baron Toshihide Ki spoke on the need of reforming the present educational system which, he said, was responsible for corruption in educational administration, and for degeneration of school teachers' morale. He also said that the compulsory education of the country should carry a separate special account in the budget. Mr. Hirao, Education Minister, and Mr. Hirota, Premier, in turn spoke in answer to the member's question.

Mr. Teisaburo Sekiya called upon the Premier and the Finance Minister to explain official views on diplomatic and budgetary policies.

The Committee rose at 3:59 p.m.

departure the ambassador look into the fact that Chinese are excluded from the Shanghai Club and the Hong Kong Club "because your countrymen have no desire to rub shoulders with the Chinese on terms of social equality" and says it is no wonder Sino-British relations are unsatisfactory because Chinese "resent such overbearing attitude." The American Club in Shanghai, incidentally, admits Chinese both as guests and as members though the Columbia Country Club does not.

been making efforts to get lower freight rates in the South.

S. E. Thomason of The Chicago Illustrated News suggested that the association return to its former practice of holding Fall as well as Spring conventions. Mr. Barnum said this was a good idea and that the board of directors would consider it. The Fall conventions were begun in 1925 and discontinued in 1931.

Walter M. Dear of The Jersey City Journal, reading his report as treasurer, announced that the association in 1935 showed an excess of $18,840.16 in receipts over expenses, compared with a deficit in 1933 and a small surplus in 1934.

"The reason for this fiscal improvement," he explained, "is due largely to the fact that the association was not burdened with exceptional legal and governmental expenses, such as we were subjected to in connection with the NRA code in 1933.

"However, congratulations on this showing should be restrained, as unfortunately recent governmental attacks, both Federal and State, on the newspaper business and 'freedom of the press,' indicate that we are liable to be subjected to serious expense in the maintenance of our constitutional rights. Thus far, in this year of 1936, we have been obliged to meet considerable extra expense in successfully opposing the exaction of the vicious Louisiana advertising tax. Recent Congressional activities may involve us in further costs."

US Federal Judge Is Found Guilty, Ousted From Post

Acquitted On Six Counts But Is Convicted On General Charge

Federal Judge Halsted L. Ritter was found guilty on April 17 in the Senate in the twelfth impeachment trial in American history and removed from office, according to the Washington correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

The vote came on the last of seven separate articles of impeachment and was 56 "guilty" and 28 "not guilty" or exactly the two thirds required to sustain the case against the judge.

On the first six articles, Judge Ritter had been acquitted, although on the first article the vote was only one short of the necessary two-thirds majority, 55 to 29.

The seventh article of impeachment was a generalized summary of various charges made against Judge Ritter. Conviction on that count followed the plea made during Senate debate that while there might be grounds for exoneration on each of the several counts, the whole case taken together should bring conviction.

Senator Austin Protests

Senator Warren R. Austin (R) of Vermont jumped immediately to his feet as the vote was announced and protested the result on the grounds that the seventh article was a "catchall charge"

Senator Gibson protested heatedly that the procedure was unconstitutional to vote on a blanket charge of confidence, after impeachment had been escaped on the more specific earlier articles. He was overruled by Senator Key Pittman (D) of Nevada as chairman and the rule was sustained.

Vote Exceedingly Close

Rarely in Senate history has a vote been so close or the ultimate outcome so uncertain, and the result sets new precedents in impeachment trials. There was no question from the outset that, if left to a majority, Judge Ritter would be ousted, but the majority against him fluctuated from article to article, and the two-thirds was not secured till the final name of the final roll call was recorded.

After the vote the Senate adopted two "orders." The first of these required Judge Ritter to vacate his office. The second, passed unanimously, eliminated from the penalty the requirement that he should be "forever disqualified" from office.

Vote Was Nonpartisan

The final vote found five Progressive Republicans, a Progressive, and a Farmer-Laborite joining the bulk of the Democratic majority to convict Judge Ritter. The regular Republican minority, together with ten Democrats and one Farmer-Laborite, voted "not guilty."

The seventh ballot was changed to "guilty" because Senators Minton and Pittman, who had voted "not guilty" on the first count, changed to "guilty" on the last. Senator McNary, who voted "guilty" on the first count, changed to "not guilty" on the last.

A two-thirds vote was necessary for impeachment, and in this instance 7 counts were before the Senate, each one of which had to be voted upon separately. One count was dropped in proceedings. The impeachment hearing has occupied the Senate to the exclusion of all other national business for more than a week.

Heated arguments for and against the judge by rival counsel concluded the final open session.

For the first time in three years, when Judge Harold Louderback of California was acquitted on an impeachment charge May 24, 1933, the Senate corridors heard the intermittent ringing of short sharp bells in series as a signal for an executive session behind closed doors. Galleries were emptied as the press waited outside for the outcome.

Beginning with the trial of Senator William Blount of Tennessee in 1799, the Senate has occasionally been summoned as an impeachment court. In the the 11 cases there have been six acquittals, three removals from office, one dismissal after voluntary resignation of the judge and one dismissal for want of jurisdiction. Most famous impeachment trial was that of President Andrew Johnson, Lincoln's successor, who was acquitted in 1868.

In the Louderback trial of 1933 there were five counts, on the last of which the Senate voted "Guilty," 45; "Not Guilty," 34; but, failing a two thirds vote, the case was dismissed.

The seven counts against Judge Ritter were:

1. That Judge Ritter accepted, "corruptly and unlawfully," $4500 from a former law partner, A. L. Rankin.

2. That he conspired with Mr. Rankin and others to prevent the withdrawal of a foreclosure suit against the Whitehall Hotel in Palm Beach, the receivership of which resulted in the award of $90,000 in fees to Mr. Rankin.

3. That he practiced law after mounting the bench by advising the Mulford Realty Corporation, for which he got $2000.

4. That he practiced law by advising J. R. Francis in regard to a real estate transfer in Boca Raton, for which he got $7500.

5. That he evaded income taxes by failing to make return in his income for 1929 of $12,000 he received over and above his salary as judge, which is exempt.

6. That he failed to make return in his income for 1930 of $5300 similarly taxable.

7. That he brought his court into scandal and disrepute.

Summarizing for the defense, Frank P. Walsh, counsel for Judge Ritter, declared impeachment would make his client "the most wronged man that ever left a court."

On the other hand, Representative Hatton Sumners (D) of Texas, for the House managers, expressed the hope that the Senate would give "an almost unanimous judgment" that the charges had been proved.

Pebble House

An interesting Port Washington, Wisc. landmark, has been preserved as the gate house at the new power plant. It is the famous pebble house, now more than 88 years old. The house originally was built as a dwelling in 1848 by Edward and Elizabeth Dodge, constructed entirely of stones picked up from the shores of Lake Michigan. The stones are all very smooth, about the size of eggs, and their varied colors make beautiful walls.

Steele Scores One-Sided Win Over Babe Risko

Domei

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON, April 30.—Showering punches upon him from every angle and of every kind, Freddie Steele, of Tacoma, Washington, battered Eddie "Babe" Risko, middleweight champion of the world through ten rounds of a non-title bout here and carried off the decision by a wide margin.

By his one-sided victory over the champion, who only a month or so ago was knocked cold by Jock McAvoy of England, in one round in Madison Square Garden, Steele sounded a battle cry to the middleweight world, and won every right to a fight with Risko for the championship.

Neither man scored a knockdown, but so heavily was Risko pounded that by the tenth round he was groggy and reeling.

Co-Operatives Gain Foothold In Madagascar

Credit Fund Societies Form Foundation For Mutual System

The co-operative movement has at last got a footing in Madagascar, according to a communication received by the International Labor Office from the Government of the island, says the Geneva correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

The development is the result of special legislation passed in 1930. Latest available statistics show there are now three co-operative societies properly so called, 43 local credit funds with more than 3000 members, and 311 agricultural organizations of various kinds approximating more or less closely to the co-operative model.

These figures show a great advance over those of 1931 when there were no co-operative societies, and only seven local credit societies with 252 members.

Court of Arbitration

The movement is taking root both among the European settlers and the natives, the Government's communication states. Of the three co-operative societies, one is European and two are native.

The credit fund societies which are to form a foundation for the whole mutual credit system in the island comprise 18 European societies with 325 members and 25 native funds with 2684 members. The agricultural organizations include 239 native groups with 8095 members in an aggregate of 311 and 9280.

The plan followed by the authorities is to graft the co-operative movement on the traditional Madagascan community institutions known as "folkon'olonas." A folkon'olona is a group consisting of both men and women who band together to organize work requiring joint action. They also submit their disputes to settlement by this body.

Responsible for Loans

The local societies are composed of individual or corporate members the latter being agricultural or co-operative associations. Their capital is composed of the members' shares. They are responsible for the loans they make, and for the repayment. For the purposes of their business, they receive advances from the central fund, varying in amount with the number of members, the conduct of their transactions and the extent of their liability (which may be limited or unlimited).

Financial aid given to members include advances for general business purposes and seasonal loans to finance the growing of the crops. The latter class of loan is repayable immediately the crop is sold. Individuals may also get medium and long-term loans to enable them to carry out improvements on their land. These loans are on a mortgage basis and are repayable over a term of years with a maximum of 10 years.

Limited to 15 Years

Since 1934, long-term collective loans have also been made in the form of mortgages for periods not exceeding 15 years. These are to help farmers' associations or co-operative societies to buy machines and erect or reconstruct buildings.

As the funds which can be raised locally are insufficient at present for these purposes, a Central Agricultural Fund has been opened and has already made loans and discounted securities to a total value of 7,586,662 francs ($500,720).

It possesses an endowment for general purposes, composed of, first, an advance free of interest from the Bank of Madagascar; second, part of the sums paid to the colony by the bank in exchange for the privilege of issuing currency notes; and third, part of the profits accruing to the colony from its complementary shares in the bank. The total from these sources on July 1, 1935, was 8,984,452 francs.

Rivalry Between WPA, PWA Takes New Turn

priations subcommittee how he could spend the billion and a half himself and still not have enough, possibly, to take him through the fiscal year.

Mr. Ickes so far has not come directly into the Capitol Hill dispute, but he has conferred with some of the members who are demanding a slice of the billion and a hlaf for PWA.

Projects Left Hanging Fire

He also has been described as favoring the plan to earmark $700,000,000 for public works projects that have been left hanging fire because the money ran out.

Naming the committee to talk with Mr. Roosevelt will be one of the main objectives of a meeting recalled by Representative Beiter. Another committee will work out strategy for getting PWA funds, either through division of the $1,500,000,000, or by added appropriation.

House members received a letter from Mr. Beiter recently notifying them of the conference and asking their cooperation "in securing the necessary funds for relieving unemployment in the heavy industries, by direct appropriation, or by earmarking a portion of the relief fund to be appropriated in the near future."

It told them that "over 10,000,000 voters have upheld PWA projects in local bond elections."

While the PWA Democrats are talking, the appropriations subcommittee will resume hearings on the relief items to go into the Deficiency Appropriation Bill.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - - - by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Heraldic Puzzle

The cast of arms of the city of Sevilla, Spain, is a rebus granted it by King Alfonso the Learned in recognition of its loyalty in the 13th century. It consists of the words "NO" and "DO" separated by a twist of yarn, called 'madeja" in Spanish. The solution is the phrase "NO m'a dega DO" (She has not forsaken me). The King was a lover of this form of wit. Now the "madeja" has long been the emblem of loyalty of Sevilla and appears on public buildings, uniforms, decorations and jewelry.

Coughlin Criticizes Old And New Deals

An appeal to his National Union for Social Justice to "rescue American democracy from the old-type politicians" was made by Father Charles E. Coughlin in closing a series of radio broadcasts, in Detroit, Mich., on April 26.

"You must rescue it by 1940 or else America with its ideals will be forced to travel the path blazed by Hitler and crimsoned by the footsteps of Stalin," he said, according to the New York Times.

His philosophy of social justice stood between the "Republican Old Deal" and the "Democratic New Deal," the priest asserted, adding that he believed "old deal Republicanism is as dead as toryism."

"On the other hand, it is possible to criticize the New Deal Democracy not only for having destroyed the crops of this nation in order to raise prices, but especially in having refused to meet, face to face, the money question," he went on. "New dealism can last several years, perhaps, before repudiation and inflation destroy our institutions.

"For the Communist and Socialist we hold no brief. On the other hand we hold no brief for the Manchester school of modern capitalism as exemplified in the United States of America under the Hoover regime or in the philosophy proposed by the American Liberty Leaguers.

"By the same token, we cannot defend any hybrid system of politics which endeavors to combine both extreme socialism and modern capitalism under the banner of the New Deal. That is why we are writing our own platform."

Father Coughlin announced the names of twenty-four Congressional candidates in Pennsylvania approved by the National Union and endorsed by members of district groups of the State. Other candidates, he said, will be announced in a newspaper now being published by the union.

Indians Seek 'New Cash' In Maple Sugar Shortage

The Mesquakie Indians have taken their currency off the maple sugar standard. Spring floods created a shortage of the sugar, which long had been the Mesquakies' principal medium of exchange.

Reservation lowlands were under water this Spring and by the time the Iowa River receded maple trees had budded. It was too late to tap them for their prized supply of sap, says the New York Times.

What to use as an exchange commodity for the soft buckskins, wild rice, cranberries, persimmons, porcupine quills and other articles not produced on the reservation worried tribal leaders.

Indian corn may find favor as the new money standard. The Mesquakies had a good supply and knew it was wanted, particularly by the Chippewas in Wisconsin, who were confronted with a small crop and short growing season.

Social and Personal Notes

Y.C. A.C. SHOW

Nearly three hundred people attended the big spring dance at the Y. C. and A. C. on Saturday evening, which was undoubtedly one of the most successful social functions in the port city during the past year. The music was supplied by Dick Mine's orchestra, and added attractions included several dances by Miss Mayumi Aikawa, stage and screen luminary, songs by Ricky Miyakawa, popular song artist, and piano solos by Jack Dale, formerly of the Shanghai L'ttle Club. Henry Kotani, Paramount newsreel photographer took a number of shots of the various acts and the guests on the dance floor, and these pictures will be screened at the club in the near future at one of the Sunday evening shows. Mr. Henry Heesch, vice-president of the club, was in charge, and he and the committee had the hall attractively decorated and supervised the evening's entertainment which did much to make it the successful event it was.

WINS SCHOLARSHIP

Miss Toshiko Katsumata, daughter of Dr. M. Katsumata, a graduate of Doshisha Women's College, Kyoto, class of 1935, and at present a piano teacher at the girl's school of Doshisha, has won the scholarship recently founded by Mr. and Mrs. Wedell, Chicago millionaires.

When Mr. and Mrs. Wedell were visiting Kyoto last April, they were the guests of honor at a tea given by Miss M. F. Denton of Doshisha. After hearing her talk of the work at Doshisha, and of the need of scholarships to enable Japanese girls to study in American universities, Mr. and Mrs. Wedell established a scholarship for this purpose.

Miss Katsumata will leave in July to study piano and pipe organ at Brayor University, Kentucky.

director of the military-technical examinations, are as follows:

Voroshiloff sharpshooters—1,259,000.
Highly trained snipers—28,000.
Aerial-chemical defense—345,000.
Instructors of aerochemical defense—33,000.
"Ready for labor and defense"—2,059,000.
The same but more highly trained—6,000.
"Ready for sanitary defense"—1,131,000.
Automobile drivers—28,000.
Automobile mechanics—1,048,000.
Horsemen—10,000.
Trained in care of horses—470,000.
Mapmaking and reading—1,624,000.
Airplane pilots—"Several thousand."
Parachute jumpers—20,000.
Glider pilots—44,000.

Qualifications Outlined

Holders of the badge marked "Ready for Labor and Defense" must have qualified in a number of sports, including swimming, running, skiing and rowing. Soviet sports are conducted with the utilitarian object of building strong bodies to serve the State.

Those "Ready for Aerochemical Defense" must be skilled in the use of gas masks and be able to identify war gases and to instruct and aid the populace in case of attack.

Those "Ready for Sanitary Defense" must be skilled in first-aid work.

This military training of the Komsomol, many of whose members are formed into regiments and divisions like regular military units, dovetails into similar work of the Osoaviakhim, Soviet air defense league, many of whose members are young Communists. It is supplemented by other organizations as well, so it would be difficult to say how many millions of militarily trained youths the Soviet Union now has.

Both Komsomol and Osoaviakhim leaders declare the training is not yet of the standard it must and will be, and one of the chief objects of the current congress will be to improve it.

New Court System For Reich Worker

tion of the German people, for all other organizations, including the Agrarian Estate, not to speak of the National Socialist party and its assassociated organizations, have already established their disciplinary judiciary.

Today almost every German man, woman, boy and girl is subject to some disciplinary authority controlled by the National Socialist regime quite apart from the regular judicial system, which deals with any infraction of the penal code.

Three Jurisdictions Over Laborer

The German laborer as a national laborer is now in fact subject to three different jurisdictions. There is the regular penal code, enforced by the regular courts, which is being amended to "protect the right and ability of the individual to work" and which therefore prohibits strikes and lockouts.

There is the social honor code enforced by local social honor courts, which deals with matters affecting a shop or enterprise as a whole.

And there is the honor and disciplinary ordinance enforced by the new judicial system, which regulates personal conduct and individual relations, although it appears that the respective jurisdictions of the last two court systems will require further clarification.

The functions of the new courts are explained by Hanns Koch, deputy president of the Supreme Honor and Disciplinary Court, as being twofold. The first is "to protect the front of all working Germans from the destructive poison of immorality and dishonor." The second is to safeguard the discipline of the leaders in the German Labor Front and subsidiary organizations and keep the leaders' corps pure from "unclean elements."

"For actions infringing upon honor," Koch writes, "for behavior that is contrary to the efforts of the German Labor Front, for lack of community spirit manifested by repeated incitement of strife and quarrel, finally for disloyalty to the community manifested by unexcused refusal for several months to pay the required dues, members of the German Labor Front may be punished more or less severely.

The Penalties Provided

"According to the severity of the offsense, members of the German Labor Front may be punished with temporary or permanent exclusion from the Labor Front, furthermore with temporary or permanent exclusion from holding offices in the Labor Front and finally with a simple or severe reproof.

"Officials of the German Labor Front who have violated discipline and order may be punished additionally by money fines, by punitive transfers and finally by dismissal from office."

Allenby Urges World Police To Keep Peace

Britain's Field Marshal Warns That Nationalism Leads To Dark Ages

Setting up of some sort of world police force for peace in a world state was urged by the late Viscount Allenby in a stirring addness after his installation as Lord Rector of Edinburgh University recently, according to the Edinburgh correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

"Why should there not be a world police, as each nation has its national police?" asked the famous soldier who headed the British entry into Jerusalem during the World War. "There is danger in delay," he added. "It seems likely that unless an effort in the right direction is made soon, the present social system will crumble in ruin."

Broadly Significant

Political significance of broad import is read into Lord Allenby's words, coming as they do when British feeling has been manifested as overwhelmingly in favor of peace, and when the world is distraught by nationalism of various sorts. His theme is also considered peculiarly timely as coming from a war hero of undoubted eminence and success. Strained conditions throughout the world and the several crises that seem to impend in Europe and elsewhere magnify the importance of this soldier's statements favoring peace.

Lord Allenby deplored the fact that mututal distrust and suspicion still persisted between nations, even so long after the "lengthy period of general insanity," from 1914 to 1918.

Fear Is Evil Counselor

"Thus fear is bred," he said, "and fear is an evil counselor. It produces nothing better than narrow nationalism, but which at bottom is only selfish jealousy."

"Nationalism," Lord Allenby went on, "is commonly held up to admiration as a high virtue, while internationalism, which is in other words generous sympathy for our fellow men, is branded as crime, a surrender, a betrayal of our own particular interests and rigths. Until this view—this regrettable attitude—is altered we cannot hope for any enduring amelioration in international relations.

Why Not World Police?

"Nations now maintain internal peace and good order by means of their own organized police forces which restrain personal and party brawling. But as yet there are no international police and nations continue to make war on each other freely.

"Wars have been usually waged for spoils of victory, increase of territory and acquisition of wealth, even glory to the victory. The lust for expansion is not yet dead but the glory of conquest is departing. Its gains are Dead Sea fruit; its legacy bitter memories alone."

New Methods of Destruction

Everywhere, Lord Allenby declared, the cleverest brains are busy contriving new engines of destruction, new poisons, new and more monstrous methods of murder. Today even the "politicians and statesmen who are the authors and initiators of war" cannot feel safe in their homes surrounded by their families.

"No nation at heart," he said, "wants war, but in the course of history it has happened and is happening that ambitious leaders, inspired by a narrow nationalism, may exercise a compelling influence on impressionable and inexperienced youth to urge them on the path of promised glory. This, especially in countries which have suffered a recent territorial loss or whose overcrowded population is looking for an outlet, exerts a magnetic lure on immature minds.

Dictators Ephemeral

"Dictators are, however, ephemeral phenomena. They do not represent the democracy, the sovereignty of a people whose common sense is in the end the sole arbiter."

The world, Lord Allenby continued, is in peril through lack of faith. The pledged word should be as binding on a state as on an individual. When the wisdom of man is matured it will be generally accepted that international interests are inseparably interwoven.

Lord Allenby declined to believe that the task of designing a world state in which neighbors can live without molestation is beyond the capacity of the human intellect.

"Give it any name you please," he said, "League of Nations, Federated Nations, United States of the World!"

"Why shouldn't there be a world police" he asked "just as each nation has a national police force? With the enormous increase in travel facilities, man has become willingly or unwillingly a world citizen and the duties of that citizenship cannot be evaded: duties calling for the wholehearted co-operation of every man and woman joined in mind and purpose to promote the good and advancement of all. And the machinery is ready to hand. The League of Nations is alive and active while courts exist for determining and adjusting all international differences, judicial and financial."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Hood Of Shame

My sketch of the faldetta, the "Hood of Shame" of Malta, was made a few years ago when I visited there. My subject was a lace-worker in the shopping district. The curious headdress-cum-cape is, according to history, the garb all women were ordered to wear for 100 years as a penance for their lack of chastity at the time Napoleon's troops were stationed there in 1798. Although the century of expiation is now long past, this picturesque fashion has not entirely lapsed.

Cornell Crew Defeats Harvard By 3 Lengths

Domei

ITHACA, N.Y., May 23—Cornell University's oarsmen defeated Harvard by three lengths and Syracuse by five lengths in a triangular race held here today. The junior varsity oarsmen of the three Universities also finished in the same order. In a dual race between Syracuse and Cornell freshmen, the former trimmed the Ithacans.

Towns Smashes 110 M. Hurdles' World Mark

Domei

NEW ORLEANS, May 23—Forest Towns of the University of Georgia today clipped a tenth of a second from the existing 110-meter hurdle mark to establish a new world's record. Towns sped over the distance in 14.1 seconds. The record was made during the Southern A.A.U. track meet. Beard of the United States held the former mark at 14.2 seconds.

Olympia
Makers of the World's Finest Writing Machines, Present the World's Most Noiseless Typing Device
THE Olympia TIKO
Attempts have been repeatedly made to suppress the noise of typing by covering the machine. The Olympia TIKO is the only device which, on account of the pedal working of the cover, ensures the unrestricted use of the machine.
TIKO encloses the Olympia 8 in a sound-proof, felt-upholstered cover, but nevertheless leaves the type always visible through the double glass window. All operating levers of the machine—such as the letter spacing lever, the ribbon adjuster, the ribbon reverse, the line-spacing lever and the carriage release lever—are accessible without opening the cover, so that the cover only requires to be opened by the pedal when inserting the paper or erasing.
TIKO is superior to the so-called noiseless typewriters inasmuch as it is not only quieter but also more durable. A special demonstration of this remarkable device has been arranged at our show rooms.

Social and Personal Notes

Long-Time Admirers of Japan Found Scholarship at Doshisha

A shining example of Japanese-American friendship came to light recently when two extremely interesting parties met at Doshisha University of Kyoto.

It happened that when Mr. and Mrs. John Y. Weddell, well-to-do residents of Glencoe, Illinois, and ardent admirers of Japanese, were making their headquarters at the Miyako Hotel, they received an invitation to a tea given by Miss Mary Florence Denton, widely known missionary and educator of long reputed standing of the Doshisha. It was on this occasion that Mrs. Weddell completely won over by the earnest and sincere efforts of Miss Denton in the education of young Japanese women that she suddenly decided to offer a scholarship amounting to $300 a year for two years to study at Berea College in Berea, Kentucky. Overjoyed by this unexpected offer, Miss Denton lost no time in selecting the candidate on the basis of high scholarship and good character. The lucky girl is Miss Toshiko Katsumata, a 1935 graduate of the Department of English Literature of Doshisha Woman's College and at present an instructor of music at Doshisha Girls' Academy.

Miss Katsumata is the eldest daughter of Dr. Katsu Katsumata, a well known physician of Kyoto. When interviewed, she smilingly said, "I am indeed very happy to receive the scholarship and am grateful to Miss Denton and Miss Clapp (Professor of Music at Doshisha Woman's College). At the College I shall specialize in the study of the pipe organ and the electric organ. I shall do my best so as not to disappoint my friends." Miss Katsumata expects to sail for the United States the early part of August.

A very interesting episode is revealed in the life and work of Mr. and Mrs. John Y. Weddell, the donors of the scholarship. While in America, so great was their admiration and affection for Japanese, that they have not only adopted a Japanese and made him their heir but also found him a suitable Japanese wife. They love their three grandchildren as if they were their own. They finally resolved to visit the home of their adopted son in Fukuoka, Kyushu and arrived in Japan the latter part of April.

Berea College, to which Miss Katsumata is admitted as a junior student, has a well known president in Dr. William James Hutchings, the father of President Robert Maynard Hutchins of the University of Chicago. An event which created a sensation in America occurred in 1929 at the time of the son's inauguration as the youngest president of the major universities of the world, when the father was conferred the honorary degree of LL.D. by his son. Berea College has an unique standing among American colleges for its training students in handicrafts and household science side by side the liberal arts. Both Mr. and Mrs. Weddell are the graduates of the University of Chicago. The Doshisha has a connection with Berea College in that the late Rev. Robert Gorsvenor Hutchins, father of President William James Hutchins, was the pastor of the First Congregational Church of Los Angeles of which Miss Denton has been a field missionary ever since she came to the Doshisha in 1888.

So anxious is Berea College for Japanese women students that another scholarship offer is now in the hands of Doshisha officials. Mr. William H. Danforth, Chairman of the Board of the Ralston Purina Company Mills of St. Louis, Missouri, director of the First National Bank of St. Louis and of the New York Life Insurance Company, and a trustee of Berea College has offered two scholarships of $300 each for two years. The Doshisha officials are now in the process of selecting the candidates. Mr. Danforth was a visitor at the Doshisha in March of last year and is planning to give a series of lectures some time next year at the Doshisha on "The Principles and Practices of American Business."

VISITORS ENTERTAINED

The Commander of the United States Asiatic Fleet, Admiral O. G. Murfin and Mrs. Murfin and Miss Murfin were guests of honor at an at home which the American Consul General and Mrs. Arthur Garrels gave Monday afternoon. In honor of the visitors, a cocktail party was also given at the American club Monday afternoon by a number of the naval languages students and the assistant naval attaches of the American Embassy.

TO VISIT KANSAI

Mr. Hachiro Arita, Minister for Foreign Affairs, is expected to visit Kansai either Friday or Saturday to pay his respects to the Ise Grand Shrine and the Momoyama Imperial Mausoleum.

BALLET DANCER TO APPEAR

Mr. Toshi Komori, noted Japanese ballet dancer who has been in America and France for more than 20 years, will give a recital at the Nippon Seinenkai Hall, Aoyama, at 7:30 p.m. June 4.

Mr. Komori who was attached to the former Tokyo Imperial Theater, went to America some 20 years ago to study dancing. He was applauded at his appearances in New York City, following which he went to France where he studied stage dancing until this year. In France, he also made several successful appearances.

Toshi Komori

He returned to Tokyo last February. At the recital, he will give his recent dances with Mr. Baku Ishii, well known dancer, and his old friend.

The program of the recital includes "Mazurka" by Chopin, "La mort d' Ase" by Grieg, "Valse" by Brahms, "Procession and dance air" by Debussy, "Valse" by Ravel, "La tentation" by de Polignac, "Georgian's Blues" by Wiener, "Le printemps" by G. Ishii, "Oto No Nagare" by Yamada, and "Melan" by Yamada.

The last piece was performed on the stage of the Tokyo Imperial Theater by Mr. Toshi Komori and Mr. Baku Ishii some 20 years ago. It will be danced again by the two men. Madame M. Janowski will assist at the piano.

MEMORIAL EXHIBITION

A memorial exhibition of the late Yumeji Takehisa, noted illustrator and painter, has been opened at the Seiju-sha Art Galleries, Ginza and will continue to May 31. The exhibition has been organized by the Yumeji's Memorial Society and a series of his principal works are being shown.

The late Yumeji was a well known painter and illustrator during the Taisho era who died about two years ago.

MONSIEUR NOUET GIVES LECTURE

Monsieur Noel Nouet, Professor at the Tokyo School of Foreign Languages and well known French resident in Tokyo, lectured on "Tokyo Seen Through Old Ukiyoye Prints" at the Maison Franco-Japonaise de Tokyo, Kanda, at 5 p.m. Monday.

He explained the historical background of Yedo, and the works of Hiroshige, great master of the Ukiyoye School of Painting. Having spoken on the evolution of Tokyo, he showed some beautiful prints made by the old master of Ukiyoye Prints, depicting scenic views of Yedo. To compare these old sites of Yedo with modern Tokyo, he showed his own sketches depicting the present sites of the capital. About one hundred persons were present, including Madame Fernand Pila, wife of the French Ambassador to Japan; Dr. and Madame de la Morandiere, and many other prominent persons, both Japanese and French. A tea was served after the lecture.

BIRTH CONTROL

Mrs. Edith How-Martyn, British birth-control leader, is now in Kobe, having arrived after a visit to China where she lectured. She gave a lecture on sex education today before members of the Kobe Women's club and the International Women's club.

TAKES PRIVATE HOME

Colonel Baron de Lapomarede, correspondent of the Echo de Paris, has moved from the Sanno Hotel to 5 Enokizaka, Akasaka.

MR. AMOS TO SPEAK

Mr. Harold C. Amos, principal of the American school, and Mrs. Amos will be guests of honor at the meeting of the Tokyo English Speaking Society at 6:30 p.m. Saturday at the Rainbow Grill. Mr. Amos will speak on "The Philippines."

Austrian Radicals In Exile To Unite

Communists And Socialists Form A Single Front And Draw Up A Program

Two years of protracted negotiations between the underground leaders of the Austrian Socialist and Communist movements finally have resulted in the formation of a united front, the Arbeiter Zeitung announced recently. This action is not a fusion of parties but "war comradeship."

As the program will be the basis for future democratic anti-Fascist endeavors in Austria, it is worthy to be recorded, says an article from Prague to the New York Times.

The first section of the new agreements sets forth the common aim of both parties as unity of the working classes on a revolutionary basis. Since unity cannot be achieved overnight, the first step must be a common plan of action. The immediate objectives are set forth under five headings:

1. An unrestricted right of combination, a right to strike, restoration of confiscated workers' property, the right of association and freedom of the press. Particular pressure is to be exerted to secure the free election of workers' representatives in factory councils.

2. To war on "growing governmental terrorism"; to demand cancellation of the right of police to pass sentences.

3. Abolition of cuts enforced by the dictatorship in social unemployment insurance and wages; abolition of dictatorial rent increases; reduction of fresh outlays for police, army and munitions and devotion to the task of providing work; increase in the numbers employed instead of overtime and the breaking up of new trusts.

4. Securing the social and economic demands of the middle classes and peasants and their release from oppressive tax arrears and claims; liberation of cultural life from clerical obscurantism.

5. Liberation of Austria from Italy's war policies and resistance to Austrian National Socialism, which seeks to subject Austria to German Nazism, and resistance to the Hapsburg restoration; support of an economic rapprochement among the Danubian States, with the exclusion of Italian and German influences; political cooperation with the Little Entente, the Western democracies and Russia.

The second section of the agreement approves resistance where feasible to the enrollment of workers into a Fascist single union, but where it is inevitable the formation of revolutionary cells within the Fascist union is to be encouraged. The third section obligates the Communists and Socialists for the duration of the agreement to refrain from mutual attacks, without excluding practical discussions and political differences.

THE CHOICE OF THE MULTITUDE

How Sweden Kept Out of War Told

Its Naval Maneuvers Were Misinterpreted By Russia, But Clash Was Averted

How Sweden twice came close to being involved in the World War was revealed in Stockholm recently by publication of an historical study and official diplomatic documents.

The first escape came August 8, 1914, when a Russian naval squadron, under Admiral von Essen, set out to compel a Swedish naval unit to retire from its peace maneuvers near the Baltic island of Gothland, but was recalled in the night by a wireless order from St. Petersburg, according to the Christian Science Monitor, whose report continues: The second escape came in November, 1917, when Sweden refused Germany's invitation to occupy the Aaland Islands, halfway between Finland and Sweden, inhabited by a Swedish-speaking population.

Russian Stories Told Now

Vague reports of Admiral von Essen's expedition against the Swedish fleet had been published previously, but now the Swedish naval captain, Commander E. Biorklund, has assembled documents and personal statements from participating Russian officers, now living in exile in Paris. Their recollections have been verified by Swedish authorities of that time.

In July, 1914, the German Minister in Stockholm, Baron Franz von Reichenau, had reported erroneously to his government that in case of war Sweden would join the Central Powers against Russia. His opinion was also reported to Vienna by the Austrian Minister at Stockholm, Hadik von Futak, and a copy was sent by code telegram to the Austrian Embassy in St. Petersburg.

Russians Decoded It

But the Russians had the key to the Austrian code, and this telegram reached their naval headquarters, where a projected Swedish naval maneuver in the Baltic also was known. The Russian chief of operations came to the conclusion that the Swedish unit, which was to make a sham attack on Stockholm, might in reality make a flank attack on the Russian fleet during an expected encounter with the Germans. Admiral von Essen therefore was ordered to compel the Swedish unit to retire to its base.

Meantime the Russian Minister in Stockholm, Nekljudov, had reported the true situation as to Sweden's neutrality, but the Russians meant to take no chances. Then England's entry into the war caused Sweden to renew its neutrality declaration, and this convinced the Russians, chiefly the Czar himself and Grand Duke Nicholas, and von Essen was recalled by radio.

Both Admiral Russin, Russian naval chief-of-staff, and Admiral Rudenski, who forwarded the countermanding order from Helsingfors, are now living in Paris. Von Essen is dead and so is his chief-of-staff, the aggressive Admiral Alexander Kolchak, who, because of his Siberian counter-revolutionary activities, was shot by the Bolsheviks at Irkutsk in 1920.

As a matter of fact, the Swedes had already recalled their naval unit from Gothland, fearing exactly that kind of complication once the war was under way.

Kaiser's Bid to Sweden

Details of the German offer of the Aaland Islands to Sweden, now revealed by an official Blue Book, had not been published before. In November, 1917, the German Foreign Office sent, with the personal approval of the Kaiser, a secret messenger to King Gustaf of Sweden, asking him what Sweden would do in case the Germans occupied the highly strategic Aaland Islands and also urging Sweden to join in the occupation, which was to result in permanent Swedish possession. Neither the German Minister in Stockholm, nor the Swedish Foreign Office was informed. This was a piece of the old-style, personal diplomacy.

King Gustaf, however, consulted the secret foreign affairs committee of the Swedish Riksdag, and then gave a verbal reply, thanking Germany for its offer, but declining it on the ground that only by the consent of all the warring powers could Sweden consider accepting the islands.

The next month the proposition was repeated, and then the Swedish Premier reported to the secret Swedish committee that the government felt that it could not act behind the back of Finland, which had begun its struggle for independence. Germany's real purpose was suspected of being to involve Sweden on the German side.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Fought Five Years With Glass Eye

Dynamite Buddy Jackson, who has served as sparring partner for such fighters as Champion Jimmy Braddock, Primo Carnera, Jack Sharkey and Max Baer, surprised them all last fall when he underwent treatment and examination in a hospital. When doctors at Kings County Hospital examined Jackson, they found he had a glass eye, and were amazed when told he had fought five years while wearing it. And all that time he had been passing regular physical examinations before various commissions.

Social Credit Test Soon For Alberta

Large Road Program To Be Financed, At Least In Part, Under A Scrip Policy

To all appearances, "Social Credit" is actually to be tried out in Alberta in the very near future.

It will not immediately and may never take the form of the $25 monthly dividend promised by Premier W. C. Aberhart in the election campaign that swept him into power.

It will begin on more modest lines, as a large road program financed in whole or in part by an issue of scrip or some other form of social credit, says the New York Times.

What lends significance to it is that the man who is to superintend it and who describes it as a "test case" is the one member of Premier Aberhart's Cabinet who has already carried out a similar experiment on a smaller scale.

He is W. A. Fallow, Minister of Public Works, who as Mayor of Vermillion, Alberta, three years ago, successfully speeded up circulation through postdated checks drawn on the municipality's credit. It was somewhat similar to an experiment made a year earlier in the Austrian municipality of Woergl.

The checks, which were in $1 and $2 denominations and postdated a year, were paid out by the municipality to those who would accept them instead of orthodox legal tender. They were, in turn, accepted in payment of taxes or by customers of the public utilities, which the municipality controlled.

Money to cover them was deposited in a savings bank and meanwhile earned 3 per cent. The checks circulated with astonishing rapidity, and what is even more astonishing is that, according to Mr. Fallow, none was ever presented for payment at the bank when they fell due. Those still outstanding are said to be prized as curiosities in many parts of the world.

A discussion of social credit with Premier Aberhart leaves an impression of vagueness and remoteness, but Mr. Fallow makes it all sound somewhat more comprehensible and likely.

"It may take us five years to get social credit working perfectly, but in thirty days you will see it tried out," he said. "We have had enough theory and the public is waiting for a demonstration."

He has a $3,000,000 road program for which only $2,000,000 has been appropriated. The other million is apparently to be financed by social credit.

Asked how, if the experiment succeeded and were extended, inflation would be prevented, Mr. Fallow pointed out that a complete system of codes, including price-fixing, had just been established in Alberta.

This was done on the initiative of small business men who wanted cut-throat competition eliminated. But the Alberta Government is going to use it for quite another purpose, now that it is established: to keep prices down after social credit has been poured into circulation.

ANIMAL WEEK

Under the auspices of the Japan Humane Society animal protection week will be held in Tokyo with the cooperation of the Tokyo Municipal Office, the Tokyo Prefectural Office, the Tokyo Boy Scout Association, the Teikoku Bahitsu Kyokai and the Association of Veterinary Surgeons of Japan during the week from May 28 to June 3.

The week will be started on May 28, the anniversary of the birth of the Empress Shoken. During the week several special functions will be given in Tokyo under the direction of the Japan Humane Society, as follows:

May 28. The members of the Japan Humane Society will visit the Meiji Shrine to worship and to announce the opening of the week. Special posters announcing the week will be distributed over the city. The society will announce the results of the competition of vocal composition promoting the protection of animals. A tea party will be given at the Nippon Kogyo Club, Marunouchi, at 3 p.m.

May 29. A party for children will be held at the Isetan department store, Shinjuku, and a paper peep-show will be given for children.

May 30. Several lectures promoting animal protection will be broadcast from JOAK radio station of Tokyo. Information bureau of veterinary surgeons will be opened at the leading department stores of Tokyo under the direction of the society.

May 31. The members of the Tokyo Boy Scout Association will give free services to horses and dogs injured on the street. They will also give water and radishes to the animals.

June 1. A horse protection day will be observed by the members of the Tokyo Boy Scout. Several lectures on horse will be held in Tokyo. A party will be held at the Sanshin Kai Hall, Hibiya, Tokyo at 6 p.m. Some lectures on horses and films concerning horses will be released to the public at the party.

June 2. Information bureaus of the veterinary surgeons will be opened at the leading department stores. Boy Scouts will give several drills on the treatment of horses.

June 3. The demonstrations of the treatment of animals will be shown on the streets by Boy Scouts. Some dogs will collect animal protection funds on the streets. The members of the Japan Humane Society will present a petition to protect animals to the Tokyo Municipal Office.

NEW PRESIDENT

Dr. Masao Takeyama, President of Nagasaki Medical University, was elected president of Kyushu Imperial University Tuesday. Dr. Matsuura, former president of the university, extended his resignation recently.

The newly elected president was born in Tokyo in 1872, graduated from the Medical department of the Tokyo Imperial University in 1897, appointed assistant professor at the university, then went to Germany to study medical science. He was awarded the degree of doctor of medical science in 1906 and became professor at the medical department of Kyushu Imperial university. In 1934, he became president of the Nagasaki Medical University.

THIBAUD'S FIRST RECITAL

Monsieur Jacques Thibaud, French noted violin virtuoso, gave his first recital at the Hibiya Public Hall Tuesday night. The hall was occupied by an enthusiastic audience, both Japanese and foreign.

Monsieur Thibaud showed versatility and superb technique. Not only the tone but also the bow gave a variety of color and effects.

The program of the recital consisted of Chaconne by Vitali, Concerto in D major by Mozart, Sonata by Cesar Franck, La Fontain d'Arthuse by Szymanowski, Danse Espagnole by Granados and Vida Breve by de Falla.

Chaconne was played beautifully with full power of bowing. The Mozart's Concerto was exceedingly pure and perfect, and the audience appreciated his exact interpretation of the classic tone and movement. Then Monsieur Thibaud played with feeling the Sonata by Cesar Franck. Here he showed excellent art of bowing even in the minimum melodie tone. Monsieur Thibaud interpreted it in his original technique.

La Fontain d'Arthuse by Szymanowski was one of the most picturesque pieces of the program. In his interpretation, we could imagine a murmur of water flowing out from the fountain. He played this composition masterly and in splendid manner. Danse espagnole by Granados recalled to us a beautiful rhyme of castanet and tamborin in the slight pizzicato. The last one, Vida Breve by de Falla, was charming music at the end of the recital.

Monsieur Thibaud played some three encores in reply to the applause of the audience. Mr. Tasso Janopoulo, the piano accompanist, shared honors in the interpretation of the program.

The second recital of Monsieur J. Thibaud will be given at the Hibiya Public Hall at 7:30 p.m. May 20.

Suma Returning Home To Report To Gaimusho

Domei

SHANGHAI, May 25—Mr. Yakichiro Suma, Japanese Consul-General in Nanking, who had arrived here last night, has decided, after consultations with the staff of the Japanese Embassy Office here, to sail for Japan next Wednesday morning aboard the N.Y.K. liner Taiyo Maru.

Upon his arrival in Tokyo, it is understood Mr. Suma will report to the Foreign Office on current political conditions in China.

Beggar Leaves Fortune

Although he had £3,000 hidden away, Jean Bois, a beggar has been found dead in a stable—his only home—at Saint Julien, near the Franco-Swiss frontier.

Lack of food and exposure were the causes of his death.

The £3,000, found hidden away nearby in notes and securities, is to be handed to the beggar's brother and sister.

Police Arrest Village

Police, ordered to arrest culprits guilty of chopping down a patch of State forest in North Bavaria, were forced to bring the entire population of the village of Unterailsfeld into court. Actually, the number was only ten.

All pleaded guilty.

"To allow the work of the village to be carried on," the Bayreuth District Court released three. The rest remained for trial and were later fined sums varying from 15 marks (£1.5.0.) to 75 marks (£6.5.0.).

Church Of Two Faiths

For two centuries, the Church of St. Esprit in Heidelberg has been dedicated to two faiths. The nave of the church has been Protestant—and the choir Catholic.

To avoid any "incidents" a wall was built in 1705 separating the two portions of the church.

Now it has been decided to pull down this wall—and the two forms of worship will be carried on side by side.

Geneva Casts About To Find Check on Hitler

Concedes That Its African Fiasco Shows Sanctions Won't Halt An Aggressor

The League of Nations' famous "dress rehearsal" for the performance expected to be staged one day against Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler has proved a flat failure. The sanctions of Geneva have been as ineffectual as the spears of Emperor Haile Selassie's warriors in stemming the advance of the Italian troops. But the chorus of fifty-two nations not only was badly drilled and wanting in cohesion, but didn't put its heart into the matter. Consequently the danger for western democracies, including ultimately the United States is graver than ever.

Can the democracies halt the dictatorships in their march of aggression? And the answer, if it is given on the basis of the League of Nations' showing in the Ethiopian crisis, must be negative, says John Elliott in the New York Herald Tribune. His article of April 25 from Geneva continues:

The machinery of sanctions has proved inadequate to prevent an aggressor state's going to war, and the collective system has not been strong enough to protect the independence of a small country such as Ethiopia from the attacks of a great power.

The Austrian Problem

If the League cannot do better than this, what will keep Hitler from absorbing Austria and the German-speaking portions of Czechoslovakia tomorrow into his Third Reich? That is the question to which statesmen of Europe anxiously are seeking an answer. As Stanley Bruce, former Premier of Australia, said bluntly at Geneva this week, it will not do for the League to continue to live in a fool's paradise, and "ignore facts."

"To lull nations into a false sense of security is not only no contribution to peace of the world, but positively a menace," he declared. And he urged the fullest re-examination of the entire system of collective security.

To democratic nations the events of the last six months have sounded a serious warning. Europe's two Fascist dictators, Hitler and Premier Benito Mussolini, have gambled on the weakness and divisions within the League of Nations, and western democracies did not dare to call their bluff.

Il Duce's Bluff

Il Duce bluffed the League and particularly Sir Samuel Hoare, former British Foreign Secretary, and Pierre Laval, former French Premier, into thinking that he would deem the imposition of oil sanctions against the Fascist government an act of war. As a consequence these two statesmen were terrified, and concocted peace proposals, which, although rejected, led to sabotage of the proposal of an oil ban.

The League of Nations thus lost its golden opportunity to club Mussolini into submission. Likewise, Der Fuehrer took a chance and got away with it. He sent soldiers into the Rhineland, gambling on the possibility that the French would not resort to force to expel them. Hitler gambled against the advice of the German Foreign Office, his chief economic advisers, including Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, and even German general staff. As a result his prestige and reputation for always making the right decisions stand higher than ever.

They Failed All Around

The French government has been informed by Andre Francois-Poncet, French Ambassador in Berlin, that if France had replied to Hitler's action by occupying the Rhineland, the German troops would have been withdrawn. The French government failed to back Great Britain vigorously enough against Italy, and London in turn didn't stand firmly by the side of the French in the Rhineland crisis. The results were a double victory for the Fascist dictators and a further loss of prestige on the part of Europe's two principal democracies which may cost them dearly in the future.

The longer Mussolini and Hitler go from triumph to triumph, the more confident and arrogant they are bound to become, and the more difficult it will be for democratic nations to suppress them. One must only glance at Austria to realize this.

A few months ago the Austrian Nazis were discouraged by their poor prospects in the face of the Schuschnigg regime. Today Hitler's bold coup in the Rhineland has given them fresh heart. Thousands of Austrians, tired of being citizens of a puny and mutilated country subject to the dictation of Italy, a hereditary enemy, envisage the day when they will be members of a great Pan-German Reich.

Collapse of the Phoenix Insurance Company because of speculations of certain financiers has given fresh life to anti-Semitism in Austria, and weakened the Schuschnigg government, which had pressed its bonds on this financial institution. Once Hitler has blocked French armies from assisting the Austrian government by completion of German fortifications in the Rhineland, the Austrian Nazis are convinced Der Fuehrer will occupy Vienna with the ease with which he entered the Rhineland.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

A Versatile Sportsman

Henri Strand of Seattle has won three different championships in three states and in three different sports. In 1930, he won the 100-yard free style swimming championship at the Pacific Northwest Y.M.C.A. meet in Everett, Washington. In 1932 at Fort George Wright, Spokane, Washington, he shared the Outdoor Long Range Smallbore title, shooting 199 out of 200. In 1935 he won the singles handball title of the Pacific Northwest Association at the Multnomah Athletic Club in Portland. The tournaments are the means of determining official champions of the Pacific Northwest district, comprising the three states—Washington, Oregon and Idaho.

Sweet Milk to Butter in Three Minutes

Mr. Tully C. Rowland of Ferris, Texas, has perfected a machine that takes sweet milk and turns out butter in the short space of 3 minutes. It separates the cream thoroughly from the fresh sweet milk and converts it into butter which he claims is absolutely free from bacteria. Mr. Rowland says the success of his machine is due to the unique method of agitation. It contains two dashes which rotate in opposite directions centrifugally, so constructed that it allows free circulation of the milk at a minimum of resistance and maximum of agitation.

Ottawa Tariff On U.S. Motors And Gas Lower

creased from 13½ per cent to 15 per cent, and on consolidated returns from 15 per cent to 17 per cent.

No change is being made in the individual income tax schedule.

The rate of sales tax is increased from 6 per cent to 8 per cent, an all-time high record.

Interest charges both to corporations and individuals for deferred payment of income taxes is reduced from 6 to 5 per cent.

Mr. Dunning said that he is confident that the new taxes will not have any deterrent effect on the business trend "which is now definitely upward." He believes that business and the public generally will gain new confidence from the present undertakings of the Canadian Government to solve the problems of national finance and "will be willing to co-operate whole-heartedly in sharing the new burdens which are believed necessary."

To Avoid Deflation

"In my opinion," said Mr. Dunning, "it is not feasible for us to achieve a complete balancing of our budget immediately. That I am bound to admit would involve deflation and to a degree that would probably prove intolerable. What we can and must do is to make an immediate, appreciable approach to a balanced budget as the first step in a definite, positive program which will assure the attaining of our final objective within a limited period."

The Finance Minister also stated that Canada intends to negotiate trade agreements with other important countries shortly.

Colloidal Solution of Gold Now Efficacious to Leprosy and Consumption

Another triumph in the application of colloidal solution of gold for medical use has recently been discovered by Mr. Rei Satoh. Injections of this solution is specially good for leprosy and consumption. The new medicine is a neutral colloidal solution of gold blended after a physical fusion of several kinds of oil factors with water.

Several physicians who have used this injection have claimed that it can cure consumption better than any other kind. Its application for the treatment of leprosy has also been successful.

Attention was first called to his discovery about two years ago when Dr. M. Ishii made it known at the Imperial University that it was efficacious in cases of laryngeal tuberculosis and scrofula.

Born in the Bonin Islands, Mr. Satoh, while young, ran away to America aboard a whaler. After many years of labor and hardship, he finally succeeded in becoming a colloid chemist. While in America, he also became acquainted with the late Dr. Noguchi, to whose advice and assistance his present success owed a great deal.

Physical Defects Linked To Insanity

Low Blood Volume Is Called One Of Thirteen Factors In Dementia Praecox

The basic structure of insanity has been found in thirteen physical factors, according to statements made recently before the American Psychiatric Association at St. Louis, Ma., on May 5 by Drs. Isidore Finkelman of Northwestern Medical School and Daniel Haffron of the Elgin State Hospital.

These factors, it was said, appear as the "parts" making up split personality, or dementia praecox, the most pernicious, widespread and possibly the most fundamental mental disorder, says the New York Times, whose article continues:

The thirteen parts were fitted into the insanity mold through discovery of a low volume of circulating blood in thirty-nine split personality patients, all women. Dr. Finkelman cited other psychiatric studies to verify this low-blood volume.

His own figures gave women with the split personality a blood volume per square meter of body surface of 2,609 cubic centimeters as compared with close to 3,000 cubic centimeters for normal persons.

The other "parts" of split personality were less heat production than normal, ten factors which govern volume of circulating blood, and the hypthalamus. The hypthalamus, a part of the brain, is believed to have some part in regulating emotional experience, oxygen consumption and, indirectly, the body's heat, Dr. Finkelman said.

Gives List of Factors

The ten factors in governing volume of circulating blood are: water balance or the wetness of tissues, capillary pressure, colloid osmotic pressure, which is the drive of water and salts trying to permeate tissues so as to mix together, stasis or stagnation of blood current, posture, basal metabolism, external temperature, velocity of blood flow, absorption rate of water from the gastro-intestinal tract, and vasomotor tonus or the regulating muscular tension of blood vessels.

These thirteen factors, although basic, are far from completing the jig-saw, Dr. Finkelman said. Thus it is not known what physical setup makes the heat centers less productive.

Split personality, or dementia praecox, is one of two great divisions of mental disorders. The other is manic depressive insanity, and this second type, Dr. Finkelman went on, has blood volume about normal. A study of a number of manic depressives, all women, showed blood volumes of 2,973 cubic centimeters per square meter of body surface.

Manic depressives as a class are considered milder type of mental ailments than the split personalities.

Evidence that mental troubles and emotions are sometimes part causes of arthritis, heart disease and diabetes was presented by four physicians of the Presbyterian Hospital, New York City. They summarized a sixyear study.

Links Emotion and Arthritis

In thirty-five cases of rhteumatoid arthritis, Dr. Giles W. Thomas reported that here were fairly severe mental disorders or character abnormalities. In most of them the arthritis was immediately preceded by severe outcroppings of emotional conflicts.

Dr. George E. Daniels said the twenty-three cases of diabetes showed emotions playing important roles in starting this disease. He suggested this might be connected with the fact that emotional conflicts or sudden fear raise the blood sugar content. He found also neurotic complications in a majority of these cases.

Dr. Helen F. Dunbar said that the Presbyterian Hospital studies show the psychic part of an illness needs to be taken into account no matter how "organic" the ailment may appear.

Dr. L. W. Darrah of the Gardner (Mass.) State Hospital said that the "normal man," like the "wellknown man about town" described by O. Henry, is a person about whom everyone talks, but who is actually known to no one.

"We are all woefully variable most of our time, as revealed by the innumerable facets of our everchanging personality; by our odd habits, enigmatic moods, pitiably warped insight, often-peculiar judgment and frequently amazing stream of talk.

"All this seems but a part of the abundant proof that elusive 'normality' is not in our septillion cells."

Finds Great Artists Not Normal

"The 'normal' is as difficult to find among superior minds as it is among average minds," he said. Among famous persons he listed as having abnormal characteristics were Byron, Chopin, Newton, Voltaire and Goethe.

"Many of the world's greatest artists, poets, actors, authors, lawyers, orators, musicians can be included," he aserted.

"Else how explain Diogenes's (the barrel-dweller) conduct; the rather Barnumesque statements of Pythagoras; Empedocles proclaiming himself a god; Plato, the founder of idealism, dying suddenly after a drunken revel at a wedding feast; Aristotle, full of blasphemy and treason; and Voltaire, inordinately vain, unscrupulous, once a forger, and, seemingly, ever tempted by suicide.

Goethe, in early manhood conducted himself 'so unreasonably and frolicsomely that the people of Elberfield thought he was not quite right in the head,' and, when he was 74, he fell desperately in love with a 17-year-old girl, and was prostrated with grief and wished he would die when he did not get her."

is an official proposal of some kind."

Winner's Widow Seeks Work

Mrs. Josephine Sibbald Barber, whose husband, Wilfred, won a Pulitzer prize posthumously for his reporting of the war in Ethiopia, where he died, knew nothing of the award until recently.

When Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler handed telegrams of notification to a messenger boy recently, one was addressed to Mrs. Barber at The Chicago Tribune, because Mrs. Barber's whereabouts were unknown.

For four and a half months she has been living at the Hotel Shelton, Lexington Avenue and Fortyninth Street, doing some translation work and trying to get a job.

Mrs. Barber, who is 30 years old, speaks French, Spanish and Italian. From 1931 to 1934 she worked on the news bulletin published by the League of Nations during its sessions at Geneva. She has also done interpreting at international conferences and assisted her husband, to whom she was married in Paris in October, 1934, on various assignments.

A soft-spoken blonde, with sensitive gray eyes, Mrs. Barber is eager to do newspaper, publicity or research work, in which her knowledge of foreign affairs and of languages would help her.

At the office of Frank D. Fackenthal, secretary of Columbia University, it was said that the prize check for $500 would go to "Mr. Barber's estate."

George B. Parker, editor-in-chief of the Scripps-Howard newspapers and a winner of the Pulitzer award for distinguished editorial writing, declared that freedom of the press should not be regarded as "some sort of special privilege."

"Freedom of expression" would be a better term, Mr. Parker said in an interview broadcast over a WABC-Columbia network. Newspapers should not attempt to arrogate privileges beyond simple freedom of expression, he declared, and continued: "Newspaper men themselves have within their own control, to be determined by the way they handle themselves, much of the answer to any threat that may exist to freedom of expression in this nation."

"But," Captain Lehman said, smiling, "there was never any conflict over authority. There was always close co-operation."

Dr. Eckener, questioned about the performance of the airship, was enthusiastic. He said the crossing from coast to coast—Southampton, England, to Montauk Point, L. I.—took only fifty-two and one-half hours.

"Very Good Trip"

"This was a very good trip," he said, "but we must experiment further. We had good weather and we made excellent time. The trip normally will take six or eight hours longer on the difficult crossing from east to west."

Asked what he thought of the possibility of regular commercial airship flights over the North Atlantic, he answered:

"We had especially favorable conditions on this trip. I would hesitate to draw any conclusions from such a journey. My decisions will be determined by future trips when the Hindenburg will encounter adverse weather. That is when one can decide how the ship behaves."

Captain Lehmann said the airship "behaved splendidly." He expressed hope that it would be possible to obtain from the United States government a sufficient helium supply to dispense with the more hazardous, explosive hydrogen gas now used for lifting purposes.

Captain Lehmann and Dr. Eckener stood side by side on an elevated platform during the interview. Both were applauded when they entered and left the room.

Tomorrow the two men will be flown by an American Air Lines plane to Newark, whonce they will be taken by automobile to the Waldorf-Astoria. In the afternoon, Dr. Eckener will visit the International Philatelic Exhibition in Grand Central Palace, bringing with him sheets of the recent German Zeppelin stamps. In the evening a dinner will be given at the Waldorf-Astoria in honor of Dr. Eckener, Captain Lehmann, and officers and members of the crew by the Board of Trade for German-American Commerce. The dinner will be broadcast.

Personal greetings of President Roosevelt will be presented about noon tomorrow to Dr. Eckener and the other members of the Hindenburg's crew by a group of State Department and Navy officials who will fly from Washington to Lakehurst for the purpose, it was announced today.

May Visit Roosevelt

Traveling in two Navy transport planes, the delegation will consist of Admiral William H. Standley, Acting Secretary of the Navy; Rear Admiral Ernest J. King, chief of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics; Frederic A. Delano, uncle of the President; R. Walton Moore, Assistant Secretary of State and chairman of the President's International Aviation Commission, and Richard Southgate, the State Department's Chief of Protocol.

Following the dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria, Dr. Eckener and Captain Lehmann will depart by train for Washington to attend a reception at the German Embassy. It was reported at the naval air station today that the two airmen would be luncheon guests of President Roosevelt at the White House on Monday. They will return to Lakehurst by plane.

Recognition Stand Is Deferred By US

Decision On Italian Regime In Ethiopia Delayed Till Other Powers Determine Policies

The United States Government will delay decision with respect to such diplomatic questions as recognition of the Italian regime in Ethiopia until after Great Britain and other countries more directly interested have received an opportunity to determine their policies, according to indications in Washington, D. C., on May 5 in official circles.

For one reason, it is not believed that a settlement of the Ethiopian question can be disassociated from the Mediterranean problem or from European politics, in neither of which the United States cares to become involved, says the New York Times. The report of May 5 continues:

Should Italy create a puppet State, the problem of recognition might arise and force a decision as to whether this government would continue to stand on the Stimson non-recognition doctrine that was promulgated Jan. 7, 1932, in connection with the Manchurian situation. For the present no official consideration has been given to this question.

Roosevelt Silent on Policy

Asked at his press conference whether this country's non-recognition policy against territorial gains won by force would apply in this case, President Roosevelt laughed, but refused an answer.

Attention here thus far has been given solely to the safety of Americans in Addis Ababa. Secretary of State Cordell Hull, through an official inquiry addressed to the Italian Government yesterday, has obtained assurances for the safety of foreigners in Addis Ababa.

He instructed the United States Embassy in Rome to inquire of the Italian Government as to the steps it was taking to meet "its responsibility" to protect as far as possible the lives of foreigners in the Ethiopian capital and when it expected the Italian forces to reach Addis Ababa "for that purpose."

Alexander Kirk, the American Charge d'Affaires, made the inquiry of the director of political affairs of the Foreign Office. He was informed that in order to dispel marauders Italian planes were flying over Addis Ababa, but it was not then known in Rome when Italian troops would enter the city, although they were hastening the occupation.

The Assurances Given

As soon as the city was occupied, Mr. Kirk was assured, all possible measures would be taken to protect the lives and property of foreigners in accordance with the rules of international law.

Presumably Cornelius Van H. Engert, the United States Minister-Resident, will continue indefinitely in Addis Ababa, either in formal or informal status, regardless of the form the Italian conquest of the country takes.

Secretary Hull at his press conference today, however, was indefinite with respect to the government's future diplomatic policies in the situation. Asked whether any consideration had been given to the status of Mr. Engert, now that Italy has occupied the capital, he replied in the negative, explaining that attention had been directed exclusively to the safety of those occupying the American Legation.

Pressed as to whether the United States would recognize a government set up by Italy over Ethiopia, he said he could not discuss such possibilities before ascertaining the nature of the occupation.

He had no comment to make on the attitude of the United States toward Emperor Haile Selassie, now that he has fled the country.

Problem May Not Arise

Whether the government will assert the Stimson non-recognition doctrine is problematical. That question might never arise if Premier Mussolini should annex Ethiopia or control it under a League of Nations mandate. Should he create a puppet government, a step that is doubted here, the issue probably would arise.

In that event it might be decided that this country should no longer stand on the Stimson doctrine, even though that might in turn raise the question of its recognizing Manchukuo. Although the Roosevelt administration has never formally abandoned the doctrine, it has not shown much enthusiasm for it.

The doctrine was asserted by Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson on Jan. 7, 1932, when Japan had completed her conquest of Manchuria, in identic notes to Japan and China that declared the country did not intend to recognize any situation, treaty or agreement contrary to the provision of the Kellogg-Briand anti-war pact.

Since then the same theory has been embodied in the Argentine anti-war pact, signed at Montevideo in 1933 by many nations, including the United States.

That pact declares that "territorial questions must not be settled by violence" and that the parties to it "will not recognize any territorial arrangement which is not obtained by pacific means, nor the validity of the occupation or acquistion of territories that may be brought about by force of arms."

This pact was thrown open to adherence by all nations, and it was adhered to by Italy on March 14, 1934, but the tendency here has always been to regard it as something designed as a policy applying primarily to the Western Hemisphere.

Because of its world-wide adherence provision, however, any abandonment by the United States of the Stimson doctrine might lessen the effectiveness of this treaty, according to views in diplomatic circles.

New Deal Blocking Jobs, Says Landon

Mr. Landon declared that the greatest necessity of the times was to revive the confidence of the people in themselves and their ability to work out their own problems, and he outlined a program which he said he believed would restore confidence.

"I believe that greatest need of the American people today is a revival of confidence—confidence in themselves and in their ability to work on their own problems," he continued. "In a republican form of government such as ours we find in almost every depression a certain percentage of our people lose confidence in themselves.

"They begin to doubt whether they are really capable of getting out of the difficulties and it is usually at this point that some one comes along with the idea of finding a superman and turning it all over to him.

"We have a Presidential campaign coming on and, contrary to some opinion, I believe that a Presidential campaign can be made a great educational process—one that will inform the public and give the people a chance to study and understand what the real issues are. You must realize that for three and one-half years we have had only one side of the story.

"First, I would enlist the support of all those people who have had an opportunity to realize what this administration in Washington is letting us in for. We must make these people appreciate that during the next six months this is the most important cause to which they can devote their time and effort.

Wants the Issues Simplified

"In formulating our campaign the issues must be made so simple and clear that every man and woman can understand them and be able to apply them to their own lives, their own futures and, above all, to the future of their children.

"Then these issues must be personally carried to each and every voter in exactly those terms. If that is done, I haven't any doubt as to the results."

The "permanent, lasting reforms" which have been accomplished by the Republican party in the past foretell, Mr. Landon asserted, what would be accomplished "to make present-day reforms practical and permanent in their benefits." The Republican party "must go forward along sound and progressive lines," he declared.

"No party should be permitted to rest upon its past record—very definitely the Republican party must go forward along sound and progressive lines, prepared to find honest solutions for the problems that confront us. No other course will do. No other ought to be considered.

"We should make it our object to restore a fair and decent opportunity for every man and woman who aspires to work out his own salvation.

"Where humanitarian legislation is needed, we must provide it. Where labor or agriculture is under disadvantages, these must be removed. Where business is being impeded, so that it cannot furnish goods or jobs, we must free it. We must insist upon equal rights for all, special advantages for no interest or group. That is simple justice.

Opposes Rise of Class Feeling

"It is also the only way we can prevent the rise of class feeling, always contrary to the American spirit and which I am sorry to see is being fostered in high places. Anybody who tries to divide our people against themselves is no friend of America."

Governor Landon declared that he was for social security and pointed out that "every big industrial nation has had to move in that direction." He believed, he said, that "we have reached a stage where government must take a hand."

"There is one really good point about the administration's effort in that direction—it did stimulate thought and arouse study along these lines," he said. "But the complicated measure it rushed through in characteristic fashion will, I fear, prove to be in many respects unworkable. We shall have to revamp it."

Regarding repeal of the prohibition amendment, Governor Landon said:

"The people rendered an overwhelming verdict that the question should be returned to the various States for such decision as their citizens wished. I accept that verdict."

Although he held that "the idea of making America over is a pretty silly doctrine," he explained, "I do not mean that we should not be open-minded to change."

"We are a practical people, we have learned to do a great many things to advantage by pooling our mutual interests," he said. "Our farmers and labor unions have found their cooperative action often enables them to improve their situation. But cooperative enterprise is an entirely different thing from a planned economy mapped out by a centralized bureaucracy in Washington. This kind of a planned society is a sort that has developed under European dictatorships. I do not believe we want anything of that kind here."

Mr. Landon declared that there should be regulation of business "wherever regulation keeps opportunity open and protects—not hampers—the people as a whole in the exercise of their rights." This principle, he felt, justified workmen's compensation, factory acts, "reasonable working hours, the protection of childhood," and action on "all kinds of anti-social practice."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Curse of the Hapsburgs

After the unsuccessful Hungarian Revolution in 1849, the leaders of the revolt were captured and executed. Among them was the entirely innocent Premier of Hungary, Louis Batthyany, who was a friend of Austria. The Emperor disregarded all pleas to save the innocent Premier.

Hearing of the execution of her son, the old Countess Batthyany cursed the Emperor to the effect that he might be smitten as regarded those he loved best, in his children and his kin.

The Curse proved a formidable one. Rudolf committed suicide, Elizabeth was assassinated, Maximilian was executed, Albrecht died of a fall from a horse, the Duchess d'Alencon burned to death in a Paris bazaar fire, Carlotta was insane for nearly 60 years, Hedwig burned to death, Ladislas died in a gun accident, John was lost at sea, and Franz Ferdinand was assassinated in Sarajevo, causing the World War. "I am spared nothing," said the Emperor, who died during the War in the realization that his Empire was crumbling.

Strange Relations

Two small animals in Australia and Yugoslavia have been adopted by unusual mothers.

A lamb which was left motherless in Chajetina, Yugoslavia, has been adopted by a cow, which suckles the little creature and cares for it as she would one of her own calves.

Meanwhile, far off in the Zoo at Melbourne, Victoria, Josephine the chimpanzee, was mourning the death of her mate.

But a kitten chanced to walk into the cage. Seeing that the little animal was tired, Josephine made a nest of her arms, in which the kitten fell asleep. Since then the two have been inseparable, and the chimpanzee already shows signs of forgetting her grief for her dead mate.

His Cigar Blew Up

Albert Coleman was standing at a street corner at Newark, New Jersey watching the traffic go by, while he smoked his after-lunch cigar.

Suddenly there was a loud explosion and spectatous saw Albert's face disappear in a cloud of smoke. His cigar had blown up.

Although suffering from wounds, he picked up the remains of his cigar and found among them a full-size .22 calibre cartridge.

The police have confiscated the rest of the box for investigation.

served in unappetizing surroundings, though the food itself is ample and could be tasty; and making gardens around workers' homes.

Seeing that mills are sanitary, even though under jurisdiction of one or another State agency, is a further undertaking. These agencies are not everywhere, and in too many places where they are the plants have lacked the skilled touch that individual initiative can give.

The opposition offered by local trades union leaders testifies to the habitual distrust with which minor executives regard anything that originates from individuals and not by official ukase.

Because of its attempt to remedy one of the Soviet system's most serious faults, the women's movement is one of the most significant yet to appear.

No Singing In Bath

The members of a fraternity club at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland, have been deprived of their daily bath—by an alligator.

Junior, as the owner of the animal calls her, was caught in Florida, and now she and her master are inseparable.

He brought her back to the University with him and she was immediately given quarters in the bathtub. Junior's temper is a little uncertain, so even the bravest hearts in the University shrink from sharing a bath with her.

Mission Workers To Hold Parley During Summer

35th Conference Of Christian Missions In Japan Will Be At Karuizawa

The Federation of Christian Missions in Japan is to hold its 35th annual Conference in Karuizawa from Thursday, July 30, until Sunday August 2. It promises to be a very important conference, not only because of the timely papers which are to be read, but also because of the business agenda looking toward dissolving the Federation, as such.

The special theme for papers, discussion, and study, is to be "The Church In Japanese Society." The Protestant Church has a history of over 60 years in Japan, and wields a comparatively strong influence; and yet the question arises as to whether the Church is becoming really integrated into Japanese life, or whether it is something superficial and Western? How far is the church really integrated into Japanese life and society? How far can it adjust itself to traditional Japanese customs and psychology and still retain its distinctive Christian quality? How can the Church become more thoroughly integrated into the whole national, educational and social fabric of Japan? There are the questions to be discussed and studied at the Federation's 1936 Conference.

The papers and discussions under this main theme are to be divided into three parts, each part requiring a separate half-day session. The first part is entitled "An Integrated Church;" and the papers under this are to be: (1) An Analysis of the Present Christian Church in Relation to Society, by Rev. W. P. Woodard of the Congressional Mission and stationed in the Japanese Kumiai Church headquarters in Osaka; and (2) "The Christian Message in Relation to Japanese Thought and Background," by Rev. Takeshi Muto, minister of Hongo Methodist Central Tabernacle, Tokyo.

Church And Family

The second day's subject is to be "The Church and the Family System." There are to be three papers presented for study and discussion, as follows: (1) Adjustment of the Church to Traditional Household Life, by Dr. W. N. Vories, noted architect and of the Omi Brotherhood Mission; (2) The Church's Contribution to the Modern Home, by Mrs. Tsuneko Gauntlett, prominent Japanese Women's temperance and purity worker; and (3) A Program of Christian Household Religion, by Dr. B. F. Shively of Doshisha University, Kyoto.

The third day's study is to be entitled "The Church and the Leager Society," and the two papers under this are to be: (1) Rural Community Life and the Church, by Dr. E. M. Clark of Central Theological School, Kobe; and (2) The Community and the Nation, by Dr. D. C. Holton, Shinto scholar and professor of Kwanto Gakuin, Yokohama.

The annual Union Worship Service and Memorial Service are to be on Sunday morning August 2nd, when the Federation Chairman, C. W. Iglehart, will deliver the sermon, and the roll of memory will be read by Dr. Albert Oltmans.

Important Business

The most important item of business on the agenda is that of the future status of the Federation. Last year's conference took action, subject to the final approval by this year's conference, to dissolve the Federation as an administrative, delegated body. This was done in view of the natural devolution of administrative functions which has gradually taken place. In place of the present "Federation of Christian Missions in Japan" it is proposed to constitute a new "Fellowship of Christian Missionaries in Japan," a voluntary rather than delegated body which will meet annually for purposes of fellowship, education and inspiration. The final action on this proposed drastic change, and also regarding the transfer of the few remaining administrative function of the present Federation, will be taken at this year's conference.

The officers of the Federation of Christian Missions in Japan for this year are as follows:—Chairman, Rev. C. W. Iglehart of Aoyama Gakuin, Tokyo; Vice-Chairman, Rev. E. M. Clark, of Kobe; Secretary, Rev. A. R. Stone of Nagano; and Treasurer, Rev. John K. Linn of Saginomiya, Tokyo.

New Relief Found For Ills Of Kidney

A. Owens, Dr. Paul Person and Dr. Bruce Austin of the University of Nebraska College of Medicine and Lutheran Hospital, Omaha. In some of the cases, they reported, the treatment resulted in 100 per cent recovery.

The hot-air fever box was developed by Charles F. Kettering, research director of the General Motors Corporation. The air in the box is heated by electricity and can be controlled to within a fraction of a degree.

For neuritis the treatment consisted of three to six periods of four hours each in the box, with artificial fevers of 103 to 104 degrees.

Twenty-four cases were thus treated. The heat stopped all pain, it was reported, although in some cases the relief was only temporary.

In fourteen cases of neuritis of the sciatic nerve, the report states, 50 per cent of the patients obtained permanent relief and 40 per cent got well with fever treatment combined with injections of salts or novocaine or similar substances.

Results in Other Cases

Four cases of neuritis associated with alcoholism or infection all seemed to have been cured. In four other cases with neuritis in the shoulder and arm 50 per cent recovery was shown and in two severe cases of shingles "complete relief" was obtained, according to the report.

The fever treatment for locomotor ataxia, the report states, showed better results than from any other standard treatment.

Only one human case of meningitis has so far been treated and the result is believed to be complete recovery, the report states. The treatment was applied after experiments showing that 50 per cent of forty different strains of meningitis germs are killed in water at temperatures of 106 to 107 degrees. Some strains, on the other hand, resist temperatures of 108 degrees, and such temperatures are considered too high for human application.

The kidney extract, Dr. Jablons reported, has been tried within the past five years in fifty-eight cases of kidney disease with favorable results on thirty-eight.

However, he added, the development of methods to purify the extract to free it of histamine and cholino has resulted in vast improvement in the results during the past year.

The recent results, Dr. Jablons stated, indicate that the extract contains a hormone which does for the utilization of minerals what insulin does for sugar.

One of the new discoveries within the past year, he reported, is that the extract causes the elimination of salt from the body and the treatment must, therefore, be supplemented with relatively large doses of table salt.

Yugoslavs See Austrian Gain In New Pacts

Balkanic And Little Entente Conferences Show Little Advance

That Yugoslavia has been placed in a difficult position by the recent agreement between Austria and France was evident at the Balkanic-Little Entente conferences which were recently closed at Belgrade, says a staff correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

Just as the Czechs signed a pact with Austria the day after she had broken the Treaty of St. Germain by reintroducing conscription, so did the French. The agreement between Austria and France is for cultural co-operation, including the exchange of art students and the founding of institutions for the study of the languages. It is an agreement on the model of those the Austrians made with Hungary and also with Italy. And so Yugoslavia's hopes of being backed by at least one Stresa power, France, in resisting the breach between Belgrade and Vienna, are gone.

Changing Tactics

The Yugoslavs are therefore changing their tactics. They begin to intimate that besides protests, which under existing circumstances would be quite useless they will have recourse to action. This will be used, not so much to punish Austria, as to discourage Hungary from following in the steps of Austria in her assertions of independent conduct.

Inquires here in Belgrade at responsible quarters have brought out the fact that the Yugoslavs are considering in their turn the denunciation of those clauses of the peace treaties that they signed "to the advantage" of the defeated. There will be both political and economic clauses that the Yugoslavs will denounce. As regards political clauses the Yugoslavs are threatening to denounce all clauses protecting the minorities of Austria and Hungary in Yugoslavia. They also will denounce the "obligation" to maintain Austria's independence—for which denouncement the Austrians would probably only thank them.

Hungary Real Concern

The "economic" liabilities that Yugoslavia is proposing to denounce refer mainly to Hungary. First of all, she would denounce the clauses about paying for the sequestered Hungarian land, then that about making her contributions to Funds A and B. She would obviously be founding her action on the "economic sanctions principle" and the precedent that has been followed against Italy by other nations. It is interesting that the main threats are directed against Hungary who up to the present has done nothing, but whose prospective action frightens the Yugoslavs more than the already completed action of Austria.

The protest that the states of the Little Entente are making in Vienna is, so to speak, more of a preventive character and is intended to prevent a step, similar to that of April 1, for the return of the Hapsburgs. It is understood that the three states of the Little Entente will make it clear that if such a step were taken by Austria they will immediately march in.

Royalists Advance

The fear that the Hapsburg restoration might come soon after the newly announced conscript army, which may be a means of making the restoration possible, is not unfounded. A contract has recently been made between Dr. Friedrich Ritter von Wiesner, the head of the Royalist movement, and Prince Ernst Rudiger von Starhemberg, to allow Monarchist propaganda under the protection of the Fatherland Front. Archduke Otto has even announced that his new title in Austria would be "Landesfuhrer" and not Emperor.

The recent celebration of the anniversary of the passing of the last Emperor—Charles—had an especially solemn character and troops took part in it.

As to Austria

It was noted after the Little Entente meeting this week that the communique issued by the members did not speak of Austria rearming. In fact, it is pretty generally accepted that France and Czechoslovakia are pleased to have Vienna make this move in the light of possible future aggressions by Berlin. But there was sharp warning against return of the Hapsburgs to the throne at Vienna.

The Balkan Conference ended in compromise, which seems to amount to little more than united action against Bulgaria.

Princeton Cadets In Annual Review

Daily Princetonian Makes Bitter Attack On R.O.T.C. In Editorial Column

Princeton University's unit of the Reserve Officers Training Corps, composed of nearly 400 undergraduates, passed in review before Major Gen. Frank McCoy, commander of the Second Corps Area, on May 11 on the old polo field adjoining Palmer Stadium, at Princeton N. J.

The review was held while the campus still buzzed with comment on an editorial appearing today in The Daily Princetonian, undergraduate newspaper, condemning the course in military science as "predicated upon inevitable war," says the New York Times.

The cadet officers marched out in squads and stood at attention while General McCoy inspected them and made the annual awards. The squads then swung past a reviewing party composed of General McCoy, H. Prescott Beach of Montclair, N. J., president of the New Jersey branch and vice president of the national branch of the Sons of the American Revolution; George H. Baird, commander of the R. O. T. C. at Governors Island, and Lieut. Col. Roger S. Peirott, commandant of the Princeton Field Artillery R. O. T. C.

Two Cups Presented

The White Cup for the highest average among freshmen cadets was presented to George T. Fielding 3d, '39, of Chicago, and the Lord Cup for excellence in horsemanship went to Richard C. Hoffman 3d, '37, of Owing Mills, Md.

General McCoy presented the saber awarded annually to the cadet regimental commander by the officers of the 391st Field Artillery to Cadet Lieut. Col. Roger Willock, '36, of Sewickley, Pa. Mr. Beach presented the saber awarded annually by his society to that student who maintains the highest general average in military science during the four-year course, to Cadet Major Hampton G. Silcox 3d, '36, of Philadelphia.

The Officers Cup, presented to the winner of the senior class jumping contest by the officers of the Princeton F. A. R. O. T. C. went to Cadet John F. P. Kelly of Deal, N. J. Second place in the finals this afternoon, between six seniors, was won by Cadet John W. Clark of Montclair, N. J. Cadet William P. S. Breese of Plainfield, N. J., was third.

Text Of Editorial

The editorial entitled "Johnny, Get Your Gun," said:

"Today is Regimental Day and Princeton's gut-hoppers will have a chance to show army high-ups what they have learned about playing war.

"Today those very same persons who before long will receive their Bachelor of Arts degree will go through the same pompous rigmarole which they boo so loudly on local screens. And because an American officer is doing the saluting they'll love it.

"To those who joined the R. O. T. C. to keep from doing the dirty work in the war to which they will be the first to go we have nothing to say but 'good luck, poor fools.'

"But to Princeton University, pretending to be an institution of the arts while giving academic credit for a course predicated on an inevitable war, we have much to say. How ridiculous to encourage the very evil which is the greatest menace to the aims of education! And how is the man who spends two or four years scanning contour maps or taking Palmer Stadium from the enemy any better fitted to hold an academic degree?

Social and Personal Notes

PRINCE FUSHIMI GIVES DINNER

His Imperial Highness Prince Hiroyasu Fushimi, Chief of the Naval General Staff, who is honorary President of the Sea Disaster Relief Association, gave a dinner Thursday evening at the Suikosha, in Shiba, in honor of officials of the society and high Government officials.

In addition to the Prince, the function was attended by the Navy Minister, Admiral Osami Nagano, the Home Minister, Mr. Keinosuke Ushio, the Mayor of Tokyo, Mr. Torataro Ushizuka, Count Yorinaga Matsudaira, President of the association, and others, numbering in all more than 70.

SOCIETY DINNER

In the presence of T.I.H. Prince and Princess Takamatsu, the Japan-Denmark Society gave a dinner Wednesday evening at the Imperial Hotel which was in the nature of a welcome to the Danish Minister, Baron Bertouch-Lehn. Marquis Toshinari Maeda, the President of the Society, was in the chair. After the dinner, an enjoyable musical program was given by Japanese artistes.

GOING TO OLYMPICS

Mr. Shuzaburo Yasuda left Tokyo Thursday evening for Sendai where he will visit Dr. and Mrs. Hatai. On June 24 he and Mrs. Yasuda will leave on the Terukuni Maru for Europe where they will attend the Olympic games in Germany. Following the Olympics, they will visit several countries of Europe and Mr. Yasuda will study sculpture and visit the principal European art museums. They will then go to the United States, sailing either on the Queen Mary or the Normandie. In the United States Mrs. Yasuda will visit former school friends and Mr. Yasuda will continue his art study. They will return to Japan late this fall.

ENGAGEMENT IS ANNOUNCED

The engagement of Miss Tatsuyo Kume of Tokyo and Mr. Kakue Otani of Kamakura has been announced. Miss Kume is the daughter of the late Prof. Kume who designed the Nijubashi, entrance to the Imperial palace, was professor of engineering at the Imperial University and who is also noted as the builder of Korean railroads. Mr. Otani is the son of the late Mr. Kahei Otani, prominent silk and tea merchant.

The wedding will be solemnized at the New Grand hotel, Yokohama, on June 28. The bride-elect is a graduate of the Third Girls Higher school and the bridegroom-to-be is a graduate of the Tokyo Imperial University where he majored in French. Following their marriage, the young couple will reside in Mr. Otani's home in Kamakura. Early next year they will go to France for three years where Mr. Otani will continue his study of French. Miss Kume is well known in the younger international society set of Tokyo.

HEDGES IS GUEST

KOBOKAN APPEAL

The following letter has been received from the Kobokan Settlement:

Once more the Kobokan Settlement appeals to your generosity for funds for the Summer Camp. As the hot days of summer grow still hotter, the children who live in the unhealthy slums of Terajima become more uncomfortable. The summer camp means fresh air, good food, happy play, and a new zest in life for them.

The committee wishes to make this year's camp the largest that has been held. In order that you may have the opportunity to contribute to the welfare of these unfortunate children, we wish to bring this project to your attention.

Checks or money orders should be sent to the treasurer, Mrs. Mildred Gealy, 3 Aoyama Gakuin, Shibaku, Tokyo.

With many thanks for your interest in the past in the Kobokan.

Mrs. Nell Lamott,
Mrs. Luella Iglehart.
Camp Committee.

India To Be Model Of Italy's Empire

African highlands.

Capital's Future Uncertain

It is uncertain whether the Italians desire to preserve Addis Ababa as the central point in the imperial government. There are indications that they will prefer transferring it to Gondar, near Lake Tana, because it is situated among friendly people and nearer the old Eritrean colony. Addis Ababa may be preserved as the center of the specially administered Shoan area, where stringent disarmament and direct control over a suspect tribe must be instituted.

Premier Benito Mussolini's plan provides for swift development of the motor-road system now started for military purposes. Great highways will run through the whole territory, opening up commercial markets and making available natural resources.

One main artery is intended to traverse Ethiopia from north to south, linking in an uninterrupted line Massawa, on the Red Sea, to Mogadiscio, on the Indian Ocean. An important subsidiary will branch off from Adowa to Gondar, continuing into rich Gojjam Province. Another arterial road will penetrate the lake region from the south, linking up with the northern part of the system by way of Addis Ababa.

On this line may be situated an important area of inland colonization, because in past years Shoan raids have absolutely depopulated hundreds of square miles of fertile land. The soldiers of the present army of occupation, when due to leave the service will be encouraged to remain in Ethiopia, receiving farmsteads or being settled in large towns as artisans.

Interests of Foreigners

It remains to be seen how this plan for intense development of Ethiopia by national forces tallies with preservation of existing foreign interests. The French-owned Jibuti railway is protected already by the agreement signed by Pierre Laval in Rome in January, 1935. Indeed, the Italians already possess nearly a half interest. Commercial development of the country must bring prosperity to this line as well as to the Franch Somaliland port because it is the only practicable one on a long stretch of coast. But no doubt the Italians will push the existing railway from Massawa to Asmara straight into the heart of Northern Ethiopia, tapping the resources of that vast region.

The British interest in the water of Lake Tana, secured by a treaty and by assurances, will be respected and renewed by Mussolini. The orderly regime now being instituted will permit construction of a great regulator dam that is needed particularly to increase the reserve of water available for irrigation in Egypt when other reservoirs run empty. But the Italians certainly will insist that this work be done by their labor with the object of obtaining supplementary financial assistance for their colonization scheme.

This is the main outline of the ambitious plan of development conceived with the object of providing a lasting memorial to Fascist enterprise. The conquest has been too swift to permit the working out of details. Mussolini's chief aim, however, is clear: To transform Ethiopia into a great reservoir of natural resources, increasing thereby the power of the mother country, and also find an immediate outlet for the surplus population of the peninsula.

Freedom Offer Comes As Blow To Puerto Rico

of Federal funds.

Mainlanders who have read accounts of recent nationalist violence are probably unaware that no dominant local party has ever demanded Puerto Rico independence from the Federal government. Pary leaders at times have united in asking for liberalization of the present Organic Act and the right to elect the governor. The coalition party now in power has petitioned Congress to make Puerto Rico a state, when the island is prepared to assume the economic responsibility of statehood, and in the meantime to grant it greater autonomy.

It is true that the Unionist party, which governed here for about a quarter of a century, had an independence plank in its platform, but the leaders at all times asserted their willingness to accept any other status that was in keeping with the dignity of the island.

The Liberal party, successor of the old Unionist organization, pledges itself in its platform to bring about establishment of a Puerto Rican Republic. Many prominent Liberals however, are unalterably opposed to independence, and it has been generally believed that, should they be victorious in the coming elections, the Liberals would find some way to postpone any action that would jeopardize party harmony and insular well-being.

Nationalists Not Important

Undoubtedly the Nationalist group, by spectacular tactics in parading its hostility to American rule, has been a big factor in creating the belief on the mainland that Puerto Rico wants freedom. The party is politically negligible, its adherents being drawn mostly from the high schools and the university.

Unfortunately the insular attitude toward the Nationalists has been highly sentimental. The most outrageous attacks on the hated "invador" have gone unrebuked because people felt that, although their language might be over-violent, the Nationalists were devoted to a "sacred ideal."

During the last year resorts to lawlessness on the part of the American-baiters have modified the community's attitude, but at the same time have intimidated the public. Probably failure of leaders and press to condemn outspokenly the conditions leading up to the murder of the chief of insular police, Colonel E. Francis Riggs, gave greater impetus than any other happening to the Administration's change of policy.

Thoughtful islanders nevertheless point out that, while Rigg's assassination deserves severe rebuke, it did not justify the national government rushly initiating a policy that brings a crisis in Puerto Rico's community life and may end in the island's economic ruin.

So far as is known here no responsible representative of Puerto Rico was consulted in advance about the Tydings measure. The island's representative in Congress, the Resident Commissioner, Santiago Iglesias, has been in Washington since the opening of the present session. Senator Luis Munoz Marin, envoy of the Liberal party, has been at the Capital for the same period. Governor Blanton Winship arrived there the day the bill was introduced in the Senate.

Social and Personal Notes

GOING TO HOKKAIDO

A non-commercial party under the leadership of Mr. J. F. Gressitt will leave June 17 for Kawayu in eastern Hokkaido to view the solar eclipse on June 19. Some of the group will visit the Akan National Park and other points of interest in Hokkaido before returning, while others will return June 22. Mr. Gressitt was connected with the Chabot Observatory, Oakland, California, for four years.

AT ZUSHI

Foreign Minister and Mrs. Arita spent the week-end at their villa in Zushi.

PHELPS RETURNING

Mr. G. S. Phelps who left Tokyo last year after more than 40 years in church and Y. M. C. A. work here, is to return to Japan this fall as the leader of a tourist party. He has recently been named assistant director of the University Oriental Tours. He and his party are expected to arrive in October.

ON BRIEF TRIP

Mr. and Mrs. Roger Burman will return Wednesday from a brief trip to Nagoya and Gifu.

ELMER RIGE COMING

Elmer Rice, author of "Street Scene" and other dramas, is expected to visit Japan in August, enroute home from a world tour. He is expected to be in this country two weeks.

HOST TO NEGUS

Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia who is now in London is the guest of Sir Elly Kadoorie, Shanghai business magnate and philanthropist, according to a news dispatch from London. Sir Elly is at present in China but the Negus is occupying his London house which is situated at Princes Gate, only a few doors from the Ethiopian Legation. This enables the Emperor to maintain close touch with the Legation. Sir Elly is well known in Japan.

RETURNS TO U.S.

Mrs. S. S. Miller, widow of the Rev. H. K. Miller, D.D., has returned to the United States to make her home. For the present she is visiting her brother-in-law and sister, Dr. and Mrs. F. F. Kramer at Faribault, Minnesota. Mrs. Miller, then Miss Sprague, came to Japan in 1888 in the service of the Episcopal church. She was one of the early teachers in the Rikkyo schools in Tokyo and at the Heian Jogakko in Kyoto. After their marriage in 1898, Dr. and Mrs. Miller lived in Yamagata and in Sendai until 1911 when they moved to Tokyo which remained their home until Dr. Miller's death in February of this year. Mrs. Miller has a large circle of friends in both Japanese and international circles throughout Japan.

PUPILS' RECITAL

The pupils of Mr. Maxim Schapiro, well known pianist, will give their fourth recital at the Meiji-Seimei Auditorium, Marunouchi, Tokyo at 7 p.m. June 16. They will play several piano compositions at the recital. Misses Kiyoko Manabe, Haruko Igawa, Shizuko Igarashi, Yukiko Fujita, Idis Tsunoda, Aiko Tashiro, Shizue Akutagawa, Kiyoko Kawaguchi, Yukiko Kimura, Toshiko Shirakura, Utako Oizumi and Miwako Kai will appear on the program.

SECOND RECITAL

Miss Kasuga Sato, Japanese pianist who returned from France, will give her second recital of the Sanshikaikan Hall, Hibiya, at 7 p.m. June 15. She studied piano in Paris for some years and returned to Tokyo last year. She will play modern French piano music at the recital.

SERIOUSLY ILL

Mr. Bakusen Tsuchida, well known painter of Kyoto and member of the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts who have been confined at the Kyoto Imperial University Hospital for some time, became seriously ill Sunday. He has undergone two operations since June 2.

JOURNALIST RETURNS

Mr. David Fraser, the doyen of British journalists in China, has returned to Shanghai after an absence of one year. Mr. Fraser, who is well known in Japan, has been a correspondent for The Times, London, for 25 years.

During his recent absence, he was attached to the Italian Army as special correspondent for The Times for several months. Mr. Fraser is one of the few correspondents still in active work who covered the Russo-Japanese war 30 years ago.

Mr. Fraser started his Eastern career in India where, as young assistant in the Bank of Bengal, he supplied "The Pioneer" with racing reports. On the outbreak of the South African War he volunteered for service with Lovat's Horse and he is now one of the members of the South African War Veterans' Association in Shanghai. After his war experiences he took to journalism seriously, made a famous journey through Persia and eventually arrived in China. In the World War he was attached to General Knox's Mission in Siberia.

For many years Mr. Fraser was stationed at Peiping (Peking in those days) and there, as in Shanghai, he was prominent in racing activities, being a successful rider and owner. Mrs. Fraser returned a few days ago by the Siberian route to rejoin her husband.

Independence Of Puerto Rico Is Campos' Dream

than I am."

Why wait for a plebiscite in 1937? Albizu Campos screams at the leaders of other political parties, only one ed, he argues, is to set up an independence as a goal. All that is needed, he argues, is to set up an independent government and let the Yankee rulers go home. Such a government, he dreams, could easily borrow all the money it would need in England, France and Germany, if the United States refused.

Less Than a Horse

It is Albizu Campos's mob-stirring argument that American exploitation of the sugar, coffee and tobacco lands has reduced the Puerto Rican population to mass peonage, to a condition in which "a man is worth less than a horse, or an ox, or a cow." The picture he paints to the crowds of the old days under Spain is not the one known to historians and the older generation here, of a people poorer than they are now, of 85 per cent illiteracy, few schools and only one good road on the whole island as compared with the hundreds of miles of pavements and the widespread, although 50 per cent inadequate, school system of today.

Though he stirs some of the masses with rosy visions of an independent island of great prosperity and matchless power, Albizu Campos, in responding to this correspondent's questions, was rather vague about how the future he envisions from the platform could be brought into being. He expressed no definite ideas as to what his proposed constitutional convention would set itself to do.

"I don't believe in pre-conceived constitutions," he said. "It should be practical and respondent to our racial and cultural traditions. There must be a complete development of the individual. We must increase the productive capacity of everything, of everybody. If we have a mechanic he must be a master mechanic. If he is a banker he must be a great financier. We can't wait on the United States to achieve all that. We must do it ourselves."

On and on he went in cloudy generalities.

As the hours rolled by Albizu Campos poured into the correspondent's ear his version of Caribbean and European history, and the story of his life. One did not have to know one's Freud to discover what had stuck in his craw. In 1917, when he wanted to go from Harvard, where he said he had never encountered race prejudice, to France, he was sent to Pureto Rico and assigned, first to an officers' training school, then to the 375th Infantry, composed of black consqripts.

"I discovered," he said, "that the United States had done the worst thing possible. They had divided the Puerto Rican troops into two regiments of so-called colored men and one of so-called whites, and my regiment was supposed to be a colored regiment. It was a very serious mistake, a most stupid and dangerous thing. In Puerto Rico we don't have any serious racial issue of any kind. Here you pass from one race to another and really they are all a new race, and there is no cleavage of those of mixed bloods from the others."

A white Puerto Rican and a West Pointer, Colonel Raul Esteves, told this correspondent Albizu Campos had made a good officer.

After the armistice Albizu Campos was sent from San Juan by a roundabout way to Cambridge, Mass., to receive his honorary discharge. Telling of that trip he made mention of how white officers at Fort Crockett, in Galveston, had sent white "noncoms" to buy his railroad ticket Northward and arrange that he should be comfortable in a Pullman in the South. He mentioned, too, how a white conductor had helped with his luggage when he changed trains at Palestine, Tex.

Recounting his island's story he came down through the centuries to the seventeenth and Marquez.

"He was commander-in-chief of the Spanish fleet in the New World," he said. "He was a mulatto." Another hour of talk got the story down to the last decade of the nineteenth century, just before the Yankees came. Albizu Campos was telling of the visit a Spanish Infanta paid to the island in 1893.

"In the crowd that assembled to meet her at the Marina," he said "there was one hidalgo privileged to keep his hat on in the presence of royalty. He was a mulatto."

Blind Can Read Ordinary Print With New 'Eye'

were nine small glass beads, each with a hole in the middle. Each bead was a miniature sewing machine, with a miniature wire needle.

When the "reading" unit passed over the letter "T" on the page, all the needles pricked the reader's hand at once, indicating a single, straight line.

For the letter "L" the needles jumped in unison, and then, just as though some one were drawing the letter across the reader's hand, only the bottom needle pricked until the bottom line of the "L" was traced. Other letters gave similar responses.

Mother Goose rhymes and simple sentences from elementary school readers were used for demonstration. Inventor Ranseen emphasized that his work was still in the final experimental stages, and the device not yet ready to market.

Even when the apparatus was refined, Mr. Ranseen said, it would be necessary for blind persons to go through a period of training to learn the new method of reading.

Pontiff Condemns Red, Nazi Curbs

least accessible milieu and obtain, as it unfortunately does obtain, incredible connivances or at least silences and tolerances that are of inestimable benefit to the cause of evil and of most lamentable consequences to the cause of good.

Pontiff Is "Saddened"

"You will say, most beloved sons, that you have seen the common father, the vicar of Christ, profoundly alarmed and saddened by this very great danger that threatens the wholeworld and is responsible for the gravest damage in many places, particularly in Europe. You will say, most beloved sons, that the common father never ceases to point out the danger of which many persons do not know or do not recognize its gravity and imminence. You will also say, as we now say to you, that everything that is left undone or is done imperfectly to defend totality and repel neo-paganism, to which immorality is so easily and almost inevitably allied, even if under the cloak of fastidious material civilization, helps smooth the way for and aids the triumph of the danger we are denouncing to you.

"And you will also say, most beloved sons, and you will never tire of repeating that the Vicar of Christ not only as the common father of all the faithful but also as a man of his age, not only for the good of the church of which he is the head but also for the good of every one, believes and proclaims loudly that the help of the Catholic Church is indispensable, for she is the only guardian of true and genuine Christianity."

"For what indeed is there outside the Catholic church after the veritable devastations worked by so-called free-thinkers and by liberalism and by various alleged reforms? What remains of the doctrines of Jesus Christ given in the Gospels and by legitimate tradition? What remains of the sacraments instituted by Jesus Christ? What remains of the person itself?"

"Iniquitous Laws" Decried

Turning then to the relations between church and State, the Pope said he was profoundly affected by the thought of "the shipwreck many souls will suffer in the present recrudescence of error and vice, backed by violence and fraud, and also by iniquitous laws, as is the case in more than one country."

The church, he added, is a divine institution and counts on divine help, and therefore its enemies shall not prevail.

"Nevertheless," he went on, "they are not following a good and wise policy who by throwing obstacles in the way of life and action in the church, or even only by permitting its full and free development, renounce the valid and precious contribution that the church and the church alone can give to public security and true peace and the public welfare.

"With these contributions the church does not at all intend to usurp anything that properly belongs to politics. This usurpation is claimed against truth to create all sorts of difficulties for the church and to exclude her beneficial action from the very fields that have grave need of it and would profit most by it: youth, the family, schools, the press and the masses of the people. The church concedes to the State its own sphere of action and indeed teaches and command faithful respect for it conscientiously, but the church cannot admit that politics can get along without morals and the canons and precepts of its divine founder, who commanded it to occupy itself with morals wherever they enter or should enter."

After having also urged Catholic editors, the Pope ended by bestowing the apostolic benediction.

Moscow Warns Hitler Strives To Split Nations

His Peace Bids Viewed As Move To Create 2 Blocs He Can Meet Separately

The task facing all nations in Europe, big and little, is to prevent Reichsfuehrer Hitler, by military and diplomatic strategy, from splitting them into two divisions to be devoured at his will, Soviet officials believe after the latest German "peace" moves, says Joseph Phillips, Moscow correspondent of the New York Herald Tribune in a recent article.

When Hitler's proposals to the Locarno powers are mentioned in Russia, "peace" is always in skeptical quotation marks, says Mr. Phillips, whose article follows: The proposals do not look peaceful to Moscow. Instead, the Soviets see in them a daring plan to tie the hands of the Western powers by spurious treaties which would leave the Nazis free to dominate eastern Europe. With that hegemony set up, Hitler would then be able to turn his attention to the west. Although Nazi animosity to U.S.S.R. has been an important factor in the policies of this country since the Nazis came into power, what is being accented now is not the danger of immediate attack. Jingoism rather has faded into the background, and the question most to the fore is said to be the conflict between the two systems which involves not any one nation, but all.

Soviet Pictures Conflict

In Soviet terminology it is a conflict between indivisible peace and security by the Nazi "Diktat." That much authoritative opinion of England, even some of France and Belgium, has not been able to see the struggle in its proper terms is said to be almost as dangerous for future peace as Hitler's own ambitions.

Lately a few friendly, or at least non-hostile, references to Germany have been made here. In an interview to visiting French newspaper men, Viacheslav M. Molotov, chairman of the Council of People's Commissars, said it was not impossible to imagine the Soviet Union getting along peacefully, "even with the Germany of Hitler." A few days later Karl Radek, Soviet editor and political commentator, who has always been presumed to express authorized opinions, said Germany "should be offered a place on the basis of full equality" in the Continental system.

The Western powers, with a long record of weakness and vacillation in the face of Nazi Germany, may be appeased by Hitler's substitute for Locarno. Meanwhile, the non-aggression pacts he is offering Lithuania, Czechoslovakia and Austria are described here as not even as useful as scraps of paper, since actually they only would prevent any of those countries from helping another in case of attack by Germany.

Ten months ago this correspondent, traveling in Yugoslavia, Austria, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, found one bond of sentiment uniting all four. The sentiment was a real fear that Great Britain, France and Italy would not get together enough to resist any determined German action short of actual attack on the Western powers themselves. In other words, the ground is already pretty well prepared for a determined Germany to establish its hegemony in eastern and central Europe without Hitler doing much more than opening his hand and letting the plum fall into it.

Soviet's Interests Widen

The Soviet Union now is very much interested in anything happening in eastern and central Europe. In one sense the Franco-Soviet pact might have been called a bridge to that part of the continent. That, fully as much as any possible plan of German attack on Soviet territory, is believed one of the fundamental reasons for Hitler's objections to the pact.

Only one way out of the difficulty is seen at Moscow. It is for the other powers to make clear that they are willing to accept Germany on a basis of equality only in a security system which guarantees security in one direction as much as in another. Since nothing in the last few years has shown that other powers are able to get together any such solidarity, the Soviet is not looking to the future with any great optimism.

U.S. Social Security Act Discussed By Ballantine

Payment into the fund in early years will be very much greater than current payments of benefits, so that a great reserve fund will be built up in the Treasury to take care of the time when out payments become larger. Actual credits to the fund from year to year by the Treasury are required by the Act to be actuarially sufficient to protect the future solvency of the fund. This feature, together with certain changes in the benefits or rates, was included on the insistence of the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent having fall upon the Treasury burdens which he estimated would by 1980 and thereafter amount to $1,500,000,000 a year.

Under the plan, this Old Age Reserve Account will be built up by 1980 to some $50,000,000,000. The fund is required to be invested in obligations of or guaranteed by the United States, the United States guaranteeing interest of 3 per cent on the fund. Obviously, however, the fund is not truly a fund for it belongs to the Government, although in trust, and consists wholly of the Government's own obligations. No concern's own obligations held in its own treasury constitute a fund, even in the case of the Government. To make payments from the fund the obligations held would either have to be sold on the market or other obligations would have to be sold against them.

Delusive And Dangerous

This wholly novel, inconceivably vast reserve fund, into which all existing Government obligations might be drawn, together with newly created obligations, is not only delusive but dangerous. It would tend to promote Government extravagance, upset established financial practices, upset credit conditions, prejudice the operations of banks and insurance companies, and to invite unwarranted increase in payments against the fund. No other country has attempted anything of this nature.

Of course the Act involves a tremendous administrative task. Mr. A. J. Altmeyer, now a member of the Security Board, said before the House Committee:

"This is the most colossal undertaking the Government has ever embarked upon."

It will mean in the end the spending of well over $4,000,000,000 a year. It will require ultimately the keeping of carefully checked records of the employment and salaries of some of 25,000,000 people. A simple list in small type would fill 70 New York telephone directories. The expense of keeping the kind of record and the collection of the kind of taxes imposed by the Act will be startling.

In spite of the staff work done before the Act was passed, it was only a beginning of real study. The Act must be agreed not to have been worked out with anything like the care and thought which so great a measure demands.

Let us think of just where the security provisions of the Act stand now. No unemployment insurance is actually established, and if through the incentives furnished State systems are established, they will necessarily cover only part of the workers and the system will be cumbersome in the extreme. As opposed to this, the Act might be amended to provide for proceeding for the time being on the basis of straight aid to State systems, while working upon an ultimate better plan.

Old Age Benefit Plan

The old age contributory benefit plan again covers but part of the people in very limited amounts, contemplates the creation of a reserve fund giving no true security and involving extraordinary dangers. As opposed to this, the Act might be amended so as to adhere, for the time being, to assistance to State plans by grants-in-aid pending the working out of a fuller solution.

The financial source of all security payments definitely provided for is to be payroll taxes rising to an aggregate of 9 percent. These taxes will operate as a burden on present employment; they are already promoting discrimination against old and infirm employees and accelerating the use of labor saving devices. Furthermore, these payroll taxes are bound to be reflected and even pyramided in the price of goods and the cost of living. They will thus operate as a further tax upon those who benefit, as well as a tax upon all who do not benefit by the plan.

Under the Act the treatment of future unemployment is not related to the handling of unemployment now. If we devise a basis for the future which is financially practicable, it would seem logical to follow the same plan in the main now, rather than the hit-or-miss basis on which we are proceeding at such vast cost. That was the course wisely adopted in England.

Any enduring plan for security measures must be developed in harmony with plans by which the Government can bear its total of financial burdens. The Government is still proceeding upon the basis of spending vastly more than its current revenues. Setting up taxes supposed to provide for future security which in fact may finance current deficits for other purposes does not provide security: that can only come from revenues in addition to current requirements. Indefinite continuance of huge Government deficits spells not security, but disaster for all. Long deferred payments in a deflated dollar would be no help. The promise would be kept to the ear, but broken to the heart.

Real Social Security

Real social security depends basically upon the abundant functioning of the whole national economy. No storehouse of wealth exists, independent of current production of American factories, mines and farms, which can be tapped at will to create social security. Nor will it be possible to accumulate vast supplies of consumers goods ahead—as Joseph did in Egypt—to meet future demands. Excessive supplies would themselves create maladjustments and insecurity. Nor can future purchasing power for the people as a whole be laid up in any broad way by hoarding currency or Government bonds. That method also carries threats, instead of help, to enterprise and production and security. What goes out for security payments must in the end be a portion of the current national income.

From the standpoint of present unemployment the imperative need is to pursue policies which will promote production and employment. The Act does nothing toward that end. Reemployment of the major portion of the 10,000,000 or more now out of work would constitute the greatest immediate contribution to real security. Not only would it mean jobs for individuals; it would mean a greater production by which all would benefit. Men out of work must be matched with machines and dollars out of work, to satisfy great accumulated needs, through policies enabling enterprise to go forward with assurance.

Reemployment and the stimulation of industry, however, cannot be regarded as the complete social answer. Systematic provision in advance for relief of the individual from inevitable economic hazards must aslo be achieved. That purpose we have; our problem is to make sure of the right path.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Naturopath Ripley

Millions of people in the northern climate must be wrong. While they shiver through the cold of winter, wrapped in the heaviest of garments, Fred Ripley, age 53, of Winnipeg, steps out jauntily, serene and comfortable, wearing no coat or hat. Mr. Ripley practices his belief in a treatment of air, light, water, diet and corrective exercises, and the state of his health belies his 53 years. He describes himself as a "naturopath." And during the past winter, despite the 45 degrees below zero weather around Winnipeg, he has been seen daily exercising in the country, clad only in his loin-cloth, chopping wood, carrying snow-covered logs, and even lying down in the snow for a nap!

The Rollator

In the Norge factory, Borg-Warner Co., Detroit, is a small test unit machine that has been running continuously for more than 9½ years, with no change of parts, and the machine shows no appreciable wear to date. The machine is an electric refrigerator "heart." During the time it has been in operation, the eccentric shaft has revolved more than 2,481,000,000 times without damage.

Success

"I painted something for last year's academy."

"Was it hung?"

"Yes, near the entrance where everybody could see it."

"Congratulations! What was it"

"A board saying, 'Keep to the left.'"—Ottawa Citizen.

FAREWELL DINNER

Mr. and Mrs. Iwajiro Yasuda entertained Tuesday evening at a farewell dinner at the New Grand restaurant in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Shuzaburo Yasuda who are leaving June 24 or 25 for Kobe where they will embark on the Terukuni Maru for Europe. Guests were Dr. and Mrs. Tango, Mr. and Mrs. I. Hatai, Miss Shinako Terashima, Count Muneyoshi Terashima, and Mr. Takahiro Mitsu.

DR. EDGELL RETURNING

Dr. G. H. Edgell, director of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, who came to Japan to arrange a loan of art objects to be exhibited in Boston during the tercentenary celebration at Harvard, will sail on the Chichibu Maru Thursday afternoon to return to the United States. Mr. Kojiro Tomita, curator of the Asiatic section of the museum, will remain about a month to complete arrangements for the loan.

TERCENTENARY CELEBRATION OF HARVARD UNIVERSITY

The Harvard University will celebrate its 300th Anniversary on September 17 and 18, and one of the most important features of the ceremony is the presentation of the greetings from various Harvard Clubs from all over the world. It must be distinctly of local color and for this reason, the greetings from the Harvard Club of Japan will consist of two parts: one in Japanese written by Count Kentaro Kaneko, and other in English. The local club desires to include in this greetings as many names of Harvard graduates living in Japan as possible, and it is therefore requested that those who are not listed in the club's present list of members and wish to be mentioned in the greetings will immediately send in their name and address and the years at Harvard, so as to reach the secretary, Mr. Ryohei Shima, No. 22, Koenji, Suginami-ku, Tokyo by June 15.

In addition to this, the local Harvard Club will present an antique stone lantern of "Yunoki style" made in the early part of 17th century which will be ready for shipment to Cambridge in a couple of weeks. It will be erected by the main entrance of Fogg Art Museum of that institution after the formal presentation which will be made in the Tercentenary Theater on September 13 as a part of the main program.

Aside from this, a plan is now under-way whereby a grand banquet will be held in Tokyo simultaneously with the celebration at Harvard. The Harvard Alumni living in this country are estimated to number well-nigh 200, and they, from the oldest graduate, Count Kentaro Kaneko to the youngest one just out of college, all gather around in one big hall to celebrate the 300th Anniversary of their Alma Mater. The local club was organized in 1898 as the oldest American University club, and there were many noted members who had played a very important part in building up the modern Japan among them are late Marquis Jutaro Komura, Count Kentaro Kaneko, late Baron Chokichi Kikkawa, late Baron Tametaro Megata, Viscount Shinichiro Kurino and Mr. Seihin Ikeda and a number of others.

SUCCESSFUL EXHIBITION

The one man show of the recent works by Mrs. Gertrude Boyle Kanno which is being held at the Mitsukoshi department store, Nihonbashi, is one of the successful exhibitions of this season. There is much of poetic sense in her small statues while her bust of Dr. Jordain has strong characteristic expression. Her modelling shows her skill. Her "Cry of Clay" recalls the expression of the works by August Rodin. Throughout her exhibition are quite unique and elaborate works. The exhibition closes Thursday.—T.S.

Vandenberg Likely To Be Surprise At GOP Meeting

for taking time out to cheer Theodore Roosevelt in a political parade.

Before he was out of his 'teens, the itch to write drove him to hammer out 105 short stories and send them to magazines; he got back 105 rejection slips. But his muse must have been part bulldog, for he wrote story No. 106—and sold it to Pearson's Magazine for $30.

During a term as office boy-cub reporter on the Grand Rapids Herald he met another cub, by name Frank Knox, today Publisher of the Chicago Daily News and a rival for the nomination; they are still close friends. But they were not long together on the Herald, for Vandenberg left to write advertising copy for Collier's Weekly, decided in the midst of it to become a lawyer, took a year at the University of Michigan, ran out of money and returned to the Herald; Knox was no longer there.

As Editor and General Manager, at twenty-two, the native son proceeded to build a reputation as an editorial writer and embellish it by turning out three books—a biography of Alexander Hamilton, whom he considers the greatest American; a sequel, "If Hamilton Were Here Today"; and "The Trail of Tradition," a history of American foreign policy.

Legislative Stands

He styles himself a "Constitutional Liberal," but he has not damned the New Deal wholesale, nor supported all schemes originating elsewhere. He voted for the Social Security Act, the Gold Reserve Act, and the creation of the Securities and Exchange Commission (he is said to hate Wall Street); but he voted against NRA, AAA, the Bankhead Cotton Control Act, the $4,800,000,000 work-relief fund, the Holding Company Act, the Guffey Coal Control Act, the Labor Relations Act, and the Reciprocal Tariff Act. He fathered the Federal Bank Deposit Insurance Act, was a prime mover in neutrality legislation and the drive to put the Post Office Department on a Civil Service basis; has fought the Townsend Plan.

German Veterans For French Amity

Seven Associations Ask Final Understanding Between The Two Countries

Responding to greetings from French veterans' societies, seven German veterans' associations recently issued an address expressing their esteem for their former opponents on the Western Front and a desire for a Franco-German understanding,

"We veterans on both sides learned in four hard years to keep cool and balanced," the address states. "We have the right today to lift our voices in favor of a final understanding between our two nations and for the creation of an honorable peace in Europe.

"We turn away in disgust from those dark elements that have reason to agitate our two peoples one against the other. We summon also the mothers and wives of our 10,000,000 dead to remind our peoples again of the 10,000,000 wooden crosses under which their husbands and sons sleep their last sleep."

The address, says the New York Times concluded with the statement:

"We German veterans know as well as our French comrades that Europe has become too small for wars. We know that a new war would end with destruction of European culture through the disintegration and slow death of the European cultural peoples.

"We know also that permanent peace and the resulting friendship between our two peoples would mean a new revival for Europe and a safe and happy future for our children, for which we fought in reality during the fifty-two months of the last war.

"The German veterans welcome the French friendship that has been offered to them in the conviction that out of the comradeship of their best men true peace and mutual understanding will be born to the blessing of both our peoples, Europe and the world."

Gestures of this sort have been made before by both groups of German and French veterans. The meeting of representatives of the veterans' societies took place in the rooms of the Franco-German Society. The German veterans' spokesman was the Reich War Invalids' Fuehrer, Dr. Oberlindober.

dilated pupils, and the immobile forehead.

"But there is also the manner of entering the room, the hot hand, quickly given and quickly withdrawn, the restlessness, the rapidity of movement, the lack of poise, the excess of gesture, the record short time spent in undressing and in dressing, the moist skin, and the flush on the neck and chest."

In a report today birth control "propagandists" were blamed for an alarming slump in child bearing by educated families and with failing to aid the poor whose cause they champion.

Taking up one of its most controversial subjects behind closed doors, delegated representatives of the nation's physicians heard a special committee state as a result of an extensive investigation:

1. "Belief that at present the part of our population with the best education and presumably the most competent socially and economically is not reproducing itself and that birth control propaganda is partially responsible for this condition."

2. It found "no evidence available to justify the broad claim that dissemination of contraceptive information will improve the economic status of the lower income groups."

3. There is "no evidence that existing laws, Federal or State, have interfered with any medical advice which a physician has felt called upon to furnish his patients but that clarification of the laws is desirable."

The report was submitted by a committee comprising Dr. Carl Henry Davis, Milwaukee; Dr. John Rock, Boston; Dr. James R. Bloss, Huntington, W. Va.; Dr. Everett D. Plass, Iowa City, Iowa; Dr. George W. Kosmark, New York, and Dr. W. W. Woodward, Chicago.

"Contraception has been kept before the general public by well-organized propagandists," the committee stated and most people are relatively uninformed as to "the possible dangers."

The house of delegates voted "disapproval of propaganda directed to the public by lay bodies organized solely for the purpose of disseminating contraceptive information without consideration or restraint."

Plans at the Rockefeller Institute to try a newly discovered method of protecting children against infantile paralysis this Summer and Fall were announced by Dr. Thomas M. Rivers.

The paralysis is caused by a virus, a disease agent too small to be found with a miscroscope. Experiments in the last year at the Institute and elsewhere have revealed that several simple nasal sprays seem able to prevent entry of the paralysis virus into living bodies.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Shod 127 Horses in a Day

On December 6, 1912, blacksmiths J. Mike McGrath and Adolph Wondersnider crowded several good days' work into one day. Working in their rather small shop, then located at 450 Waconta St., St. Paul, Minn., they started shoeing horses—four shoes for each animal—at six o'clock in the morning and worked steadily all day and far into the night. Finishing at 11 p.m., they found they had shod a total of 127 horses, which means they prepared 508 hoofs, fitted an equal number of shoes, and drove and clinched 4,064 nails.

24,855 Days in a Diary

G. H. Tripp of Eugene, Oregon, is a man of exceedingly regular habits. He started a daily diary on January 1, 1868, and every day since that time he has made an entry, recording his activities, a total of 24,855 entries to February 4th this year. Mr. Tripp, now past 86 years of age, rode his bicycle every day until he was 82, and can still go out for a spin on it any time he chooses.

ing needs of this country is for our leaders, both public and private, to take unto themselves some of the courage of the common people."

Attica, the scene of the Governor's fourth address to the country, is known as the "Democratic tombstone town." In its cemetery is the grave of Nathaniel Grigsby, a second lieutenant in the Civil War, who before his death wrote this epitaph engraved on his stone:

"Through this inscription I wish to enter my dying protest against what is called the Democratic party. I have watched it closely since the days of Jackson and know that all the misfortunes of our nation has come to it through this so-called party. Therefore beware of this party of treason."

Governor Landon, traveling here by plane and automobile, stopped at Wichita to ride in a covered wagon and send messages inviting Governors of all the States to the Kansas jubilee celebration next October.

Ancient British Castle Is Gradually Yielding Secrets Of Defenses

Maiden Castle, the greatest of several of that title in Great Britain, is gradually yielding up the secrets of its lengthly history under the skilled excavation work of Dr. R. E. Mortimer Wheeler, who is supervising for the Society of Antiquaries. The summary of his second year's work has recently been published.

History Mainly Peaceful

According to Dr. Wheeler's reckoning the first occupation of this high-ground site which overlooks the modern town of Dorchester began about 4000 years B. C., says the Christian Science Monitor, whose article continues. Here was a pastoral people living in their neolithic village and surrounded by a two-ditch system for its protection. Pottery remnants and flint and horn implements have been found.

Then the site was apparently abandoned for many centuries until about the fourth century B. C. when Maiden Castle with a resemblance to its present-day layout began to evolve.

More Acreage Enclosed

At this period some 15 acres were enclosed with a rampart and ditch and one entrance. This entrance flanked by a wooden stockade was located last summer by the discovery of the gate sockets. The settlement grew in size, it is now shown, until some 50 acres were enclosed.

Then about 100 B. C. came invaders who settled there and built the great fortress of which the remains in excellent condition exist to this day. When the Romans conquered Britain in the first century A. D. the hill fortress seems to have been abandoned and its inhabitants went down into the valley town of Dorchester.

But there is another chapter in Maiden Castle's history. Last summer the foundations of a Roman temple were found and a new gateway leading to it in the castle ramparts. On the road to this temple could still be traced the wheel marks of the vehicles which probably brought pilgrims up the hill. Fourth century Roman coins and other relics have also been found round about, including Roman horseshoes.

The history of the castle seems to have been mainly peaceful, as far more signs of agricultural pursuits have been found than of martial weapons, though pits full of slingstones have been found.

The sites of the gateway and the temple will be further explored during the coming summer.

ed to resume his duties as chief-of-staff of the Italian Army. Marshal Graziani has been acting Viceroy of Ethiopia after Marshal Badoglio's departure from Addis Ababa last month.

It was stated in this connection that the former Viceroy returned to Rome at his own request.

Meanwhile, the audience given by the King to Premier Benito Mussolin, and Marshal Badoglio today led to unconfirmed reports that a new military defense body will be created with the marshal heading all defense forces of Italy.

People On Relief In US Not Content With Jobs

through most of the depression. One winter, because the house was too damp and cold, the relief people persuaded them to take a cheap apartment. The transfer would have turned out well had Robinson's short-time jobs lasted longer. When he could not pay the rent, he had to move.

The only choice he then had consisted of taking a couple of rooms in a foreign neighborhood where rents were lowest, but where the family knew no one, or going back to their house. They decided to brave the rest of the depression in their own home.

HOLC Saves Home

Even that refuge would have been swept away except for the Government's help. Taking his property out of the building and loan association when times were good, Robinson had made a mortgage on it for the unpaid balance of $1800. Incidentally he also obtained a personal loan of $250 from another bank to finance a porch and other improvements. During the depression the bank refused to renew the mortgage. Foreclosure would have resulted had not the Federal Home Owners Loan Corporation held out its hand.

Robinson's unpaid taxes and interest had piled to $425. The HOLC paid these arrears and added their cost to the new mortgage it made, now $2225. On his previous relief pay Robinson wasn't able to meet the interest on his new HOLC mortgage. The monthly payment of $25 he is now making to the HOLC, thanks to his present better job, is cutting down back HOLC interest. Happily, however, he bought in a newer suburban section. He thinks his land has not depreciated.

Shuns Radicalism

Robinson had not had the resource of a buoyant, optimistic disposition to soften his joltings. He's just an average, earnest, plodding American, who, knowing he is up against it, tries to pull through.

"I like to see the picture as it is," he remarks. "I don't like to fool myself."

Though trials often remake men's thinking, Robinson has not turned "red."

His rejection of radicalism illustrates how American labor has held steady. Frequently beset by desperation, American workingmen have refused to turn revolutionary. They just don't see any solution that way.

Experience with this depression, however, has convinced Robinson that the economic system has something wrong in it.

"We thought we'd be sitting on the top by 1933," he observes. "Instead, we fell way to the bottom."

Consequently he believes that some change should be made to protect the millions like himself who periodically are dashed into disaster by recurring slumps for which they are not responsible.

"I really believe and was taught to believe," he remarks, "that when a man does right he is given consideration.

"It seems a shame when you don't throw your money away, when you are what I would call steady—I don't gamble or drink—to have this sort of thing happen.

"At certain times your conditions bother you if you're thinking about home. You see it run down and then you see it run down further. It's only since I got this last job that I've been able to start fixing it up.

"Sometimes you feel the world is against you.

Not a Communist

"But I'm not going Communist. I don't believe in Socialism. I can't see their ideas. They're wrong from the beginning. Neither one will eradicate the conditions."

Though Robinson now and then doubts whether he will ever be re-employed by industry, he does not let discouragement prevail.

"I'm still a young man, and have hopes of a change," he argues. "Sometimes it's hard to hope. Yet if you don't have hope you don't have anything."

Planes Are Tested At 500-Mile Speed

this type of tail wheel—commonly used—it swerved in a full turn. Then a similar model with a castering nose wheel was launched in the same way, and each time it ran true along the path of landing.

Studies of the effects of ground winds on airships at landing and taking off or mooring were explained in the full-scale wind tunnel. It was brought out that, using a model of the lost Macon, a ground wind of twenty miles an hour may exert a lift of as much as 25,000 pounds and at the same time a lateral force of 65,000 pounds in certain angles of the ship to the wind. Revision of ground-handling equipment for dirigibles is foreseen as a result of this original study.

Better cooling for radial engines was indicated by a new design of the famous N. A. C. A. cowling called the nose slot cowl, in which the cooling air is drawn into the center of the engine cowl opening and then pumped out through a slot just back of the rounded nose of the cowl itself. This action is induced entirely by the design of the cowl and requires no power. It increases the pressures of the cooling flow through the engine very materially, however.

Youth Of World Looks Askance At War Threats

and the vastness have mellowed, been elbowed quietly into the background. And walking through the Public Garden, the lawn and the great trees, glimpses of serene rows of old houses, there swept suddenly over me so strong an illusion of London—Kensington Gardens and the Serpentine slowly meandering!

I said this to the young lawyer who had snatched at my presence as a good excuse to get out of a hot office into the possible region of a breeze.

"Yes, like it," he said, "and yet 'like' is not the word. America is a continuation of Europe and this is one of the first places where Europeans became Americans, so it's natural to feel it strongly here. But I've got romantic notions about America, you know. I think there were some very great ideas born in Europe about the time the first settlers moved over. Equality of man, tolerance, freedom of thought—that sort of thing. In the old countries they were stifled. They came over here to give these ideas room to live, you see. Put up with every sort of physical misery and danger just so that they could call their lives their own."

We stopped in front of a row of statues.

"These gentlemen, that's what they fought for. The Revolution to insure our freedom, the Civil War to break down a system that defied it. Lately those ideas have grown pretty hazy. We've forgotten what we're about, but I think we're beginning to remember again. America is a place where a man may stand for what he believes, not what he is told to believe; where he goes on his own merits, not his ancestors'; where he is under no obligation to die for a centuryold quarrel, rooted in mutual ignorance and suspicion of the other fellow. We must keep it like this, fluid, no dictatorship, no foreign wars; as it was in the beginning, a sanctuary from the stupidity and destruction of the old order."

"Well," he laughed, "I guess I talk too much. I'm sorry for you in all this heat."

Essentially The Same

Outwardly these young men were very different, essentially they seemed like one man. Call it law, advertising, school-teaching, agriculture; it was this quality which vitalized each of them—the absorbing adventure of living. What could come out of a war between them, except that each would take from the other what he held most dear?

In each country it is the same now; youth has a hard time of it. But we would be greater, more fortunate than any preceding generation, if through a knowledge of our common purpose we could transfer our differences into a world-wide fulfilment of our unity. Oh you rulers, you experienced ones who rule in the name of our futures, we ask only this: Do not tell us to die for our country. Let us live for it!

Reich Trade Turns Downward Again

Socialist regime has neither cash nor foreign credits it must adjust its imports to its exports and, if its exports continue to decline, must curtail imports regardless of the political, social or industrial consequences.

Underlies "Schacht Crisis"

This reversal of the foreign trade trend may be assumed to have been at the bottom of the recent "Schacht crisis" (referring to Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, Economics Minister and president of the Reichsbank). It explains both Col. Gen. Hermann Goering's appointment as Raw Materials and Foreign Exchange Commissar and the growing demand for devaluation of tht mark, although all issues are shelved for the present by the provisional continuation and even increase of the export subsidy to a theoretical 1,200,000,000 marks.

If this amount can actually be collected and if the subsidies, which have run heretofore from 25 to 40 and even 50 per cent, are maintained or perhaps raised, it is wholly possible that the trend of Germany's foreign trade may be turned for the better again.

For prices still determine exports, and there are indications that the decline in German exports has been caused partly at least by the premature exhaustion of last year's subsidy fund. Rumors to that effect have been current since early this year and are partly confirmed by the fact that in April, for the first time under the subsidy regime, the average price of German exports went up, making the exports shrinkage even greater in volume than in value.

In any case, however, subsidizing of exports means selling at a loss, and it remains to be seen how long Germany can stand such a loss without consequences that will force new decisions upon her.

Socialists In US Name Thomas For Presidency

and with cries of "We want Thomas," the paraders cheered themselves hoarse. The demonstration was repeated after a brief address by the candidate.

Escorted into the hall by a committee headed by Mayor Daniel W. Hoan of Milwaukee, who had seconded his nomination, Mr. Thomas assailed the New Deal, declared that President Roosevelt had failed to meet the needs of the nation, especially the problems of unemployment and recovery, and pleaded for a clear-cut Socialist program.

Questions Wisdom of Labor

In a speech of acceptance tonight Mr. Thomas questioned the wisdom of labor leaders who are backing President Roosevelt for re-elections.

"Mr. Roosevelt has not delivered us from poverty, exploitation and war," he said. "In short, the New Deal has not worked. Even if the temporary achievements of the New Deal were infinitely greater than they are, it could not long deliver us against the relentless threat of a disintegrating civilization to war or a new cycle of wars, to a new birth of tyranny in a Fascist form. It is not the old deal that has failed or the New Deal that has failed, but the capitalist rationalism, of which both are the expression."

"Let us grant that Mr. Roosevelt has done more for the workers, or some of them, than his predecessors, and that with all the faults of his system of relief to the unemployed it represents a more extensive assumption of public responsibility than the Liberty League approves," Mr. Thomas continued. "Is this all that the workers have a right to expect in the land where even capitalist economists tell us that we have technological resources to provide every American family with a minimum income of $2,500 a year?

Hits Roosevelt on Court

"Add the debits and the credits of the New Deal with as optimistic an estimate of the credits as you will, and the sum total is not prosperity or abundance, or security or freedom from war or exploitation. It is not even an organization of forces assuredly on the march to these great ends.

"As for the Supreme Court, the most significant sign of Mr. Roosevelt's essential weakness, or perhaps I should say of the price demanded of him by the political and economic system which he supports, is his utter failure up to now to give us a clear lead concerning whatever plans he may have to make democracy constitutional and to emancipate us from a judicial oligarchy. He has criticized the Constitution and the court, but not constructively.

"The President has not tried to divorce himself from the aggregation of politicians which Farley keeps in some sort of order for him at the expense of the well-nigh complete prostitution of the principle of civil service. For almost four years we have spent billions on public works, millions of it on boon doggling, while our people still live in shacks and slums, and the inadequate Wagner Housing Bill is not even on the President's must list."

Communist Unity Rejected

The convention turned down today the proposal of the Communist party for a united front in the Presidential election. A communication from the Communists for such unity was rejected on a motion to table. This was in accordance with the position taken by Mr. Thomas rejecting a formal united front with the Communists but favoring partial united action on specific issues. Consideration of the party platform was deferred until tomorrow when the delegates found themselves confronted by several drafts, which were referred to the platform committee for a supplementary report.

The factional conflict in the party continued to dominate the convention proceedings. It was accented by an announcement from the rival party formed by the New York "Old Guard," excluded from the convention and other right-wing elements, that it would call a national convention of its own to formulate a program and perfect organization.

The rival group, headed by Louis Waldman, "Old Guard" leader, announced that James Maurer of Pennsylvania, Mr. Thomas's running mate in the last two Presidential campaigns, would be asked to become chairman of the new organization, which has assumed the name of Social Democratic Federation.

A provisional national executive committee has been chosen to function until a national convention is called. The members of this committee are George R. Kirkpatrick of California, Edward C. Thompson of New Jersey, James O'Neal of New York, Lester C. Coy of Ohio, Algernon Lee of New York, Moris Berman of New York, treasurer, and G. August Gerber of New York, secretary.

Rival Group Opposes Violence

A statement of principle, presented by Mr. Lee and adopted this morning by the rival group, pledged the members of the Social Democratic Federation to "the purposes and methods of the international Socialist movement." It outlined the goal of the new organization as "the social ownership and democratic control of all productive wealth which, under private ownership, serves as a source of profit to its owners at the expense of the toiling masses."

"We rely for the attainment of our aims upon the use of democratic methods. In the United States there is no justification for a resort to insurrection and violence nor for any open or veiled propaganda in favor of preparation for such action."

Mr. Thomas predicted that the effort to launch a rival Socialist organization "will be peculiarly unsuccessful."

"The principles of this new group are somewhat socialistic, but there is no evidence that they have been considered in relation to our turbulent modern world," he said. "The continued implication that the Socialist party as opposed to this little group advocates violent insurrection and dictatorship is, of course, false."

States Get New Authority

The factional fight within the party found another echo when the convention adopted an amendment to the constitution providing that "the State organization shall have full and final authority over admission and expulsion of members, being responsible, however, to the national executive committee and the national convention for any abuse of its power."

Mayor Hoan led the debate in favor of the adoption of this amendment, which he characterized as defining properly the respective jurisdictions of the State organizations and the national executive committee, a question which played an important part in the New York conflict.

Right wing delegates, headed by Joseph Bearak of Massachusetts, took the position that adoption of the amendment established a "dictatorship" of the national executive committee over the party. He said it was a tacit admission that the committee had no right to deprive the New York old guard organization of its charter, by which act, he declared, it finally found itself outside the party.

U.S. Teachers Advised To Dance And Smoke

Grover C. Bowman, Superintendent of North Adoms schools in Massachussets has advised school teachers to "dance, smoke, dress in style and live like other people."

"Our American teachers are a nervous lot," he told the Parent-Teachers' Association and Berkshire County educators, accoring to the New York Herald Tribune. "Suppressions and frustrations of our teachers are bound to be reflected in the children they teach, making a nervous, less receptive class."

NO FORMAL RECEPTION

Because of Court Mourning, there will be no formal reception at the British Embassy on the King's Birthday, June 23rd, but Sir Robert and Lady Clive will be at home informally in the afternoon from 5 to 7 p.m. to British subjects.

FISHING PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. Iwajiro Yasuda entertained Sunday at an ayu fishing party on the upper Tamagawa. A boat was chartered for the day and the guests sailed to a special part of the river which had been reserved for them and there caught more than 200 of the delicious fish which they later cooked and ate on the spot. After dinner they were entertained by a fisherman who showed them how cormorant fishing is done. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Hatai, Miss Shinako Terashima, Miss Hatsune Yasuda, Mr. Kahahiro Mitsui, Mr. Minoru Sugiyama, and Master Yasuda.

NEW APPOINTMENT

News has been received from England that the Rev. G. H. Hanle who from 1922 to March of this year was a C.M.S. missionary on the staff of the Central Theological College at Ikebukuro, has been appointed vicar of Stinsford, Dorchester. The church is well known to literary people as the remains of Thomas Hardy are buried there.

SPECIAL SERVICE

A service of dedication for members of the "Toc H" and their friends, to which the public is invited, will be held at 6 p.m. today at St. Andrew's church, Shiba. The service forms a part of the "Coming of Age Festival" of a movement which started in a rest house for British soldiers in Flanders in 1915 and which has now grown into a world-wide movement. Members are mainly young men pledged to promote the spirit of fellowship and service among men in dependence on the ideals of Christian faith. The preacher at the Tokyo service will be the chaplain of the local group, the Rev. C. K. Sansbury. Mr. J. R. McKenlay of the Mitsubishi Marine & Fire Insurance Co., is the honorary treasurer of the local group.

FAREWELL RECITAL

The farewell recital of Mr. Jacques Thibaud, French violin virtuoso, was given at the Hibiya Public Hall at 7:30 p.m. Sunday, Mr. Thibaud was warmly applauded when he played two violin concertos by Mozart and Bruch with the orchestra accompaniment by the Chuo Orchestra conducted by Mr. Robert Pollak.

The violin concert D major No. 2 by Mozart is one of the famous violin concertos and its first part is Allegro, then Andante-cantabile and the last part is Rondo. The composition was well interpreted by Mr. Thibaud, especially the second part of Andante cantabile and the last Rondo were beautiful.

The concerto G minor No. 1 by Bruch was also performed brilliantly, especially the first part-Allegro moderate and the last part-Allegro energico which were splended.

Mr. Thibaud played the following pieces in the second part of the program. "En bateaul" by Debussy, "Caprice" by Rode-Thibaud, "Valse" by Brahms and "Vida Breve" by de Falla. The Chuo Orchestra has made great progress recently and it performed well the orchestral parts of the program of which great success must be shared with Mr. Robert Pollak who directed at the recital. —T. Italians Face Trouble To Gain Control In E.A.

Viceroy Badogli or General Graziani will find, too, that the native troops enlisted on the high plateaux cannot stay down in the gorges during the rainy season. All this involves serious problems for his recruiting and administrative officers.

The Italians' immediate problem, however, is to restore order. It is to be expected that at the outset they will find a general readiness to make nominal submission to Italian rule except among the more intractable, who, according to reliable information, are already forming themselves into bands of "shiftas" or robbers.

Opposition in West

There is known to be a concentration of opposition to Italian sovereignty in Gojjam Province. There are also bands of "shiftas" or robbers being formed in the more rugged territory where the Italians cannot be said to have actually taken control.

These bands may be expected to give up the traditional mass formation of Ethiopian fighters and adopt the guerrilla tactics so successful in the Atlas, in the Riff and on the Northwest Frontier. The task of subjugating them is not one which can be carried out by airplane. The Italians will have to send out flying columns of infantry against them during the eight dry months of the year.

Failure to deal with the shiftas world not only affect the prestige of the new rulers but would also involve growing insecurity for the parts of the country in which the Italian colonists were being established. Spain found this to her cost in the Riff. Rule by the strong hand has hitherto always been necessary in Ethiopia. It is scarcely likely that an alien white overlord can change this fact overnight.

Problem of Guns

Another knotty problem arises over the question of arms. If the Italians do not disarm the Ethiopians, they are obviously asking for trouble. But, scarcely feels himself to be properly dressed unless he has a firearm of some sort. What is more, without arms there is no protection either against wild beasts or against roving bands of shiftas.

Attempt to disarm the local population now being undertaken are expected to lead to most of the rifles being hidden. The Italians, in this case, must always be prepared to face the possibility that there will be a spontaneous outbreak against them—a repetition, as it were, of the Indian mutiny. This means that a strong garrison will have to be maintained, the cost of which will for some time be quite beyond the capacity of Ethiopia to defray. Even if a considerable part of the garrison is recruited in Ethiopia, the Italian taxpayer will for some years have to pay the piper—unless British, American or other financiers are generous enough to lift the burden off his shoulders.

High Cost of Colonization

In so far as Premier Benito Mussolini's colonization plans are concerned, it can only be said that here again a considerable burden must at the outset fall on the Italian taxpayer unless outside help is obtained or alternatively the new colonists are to be reduced to the native standard of living. Huge sums will have to be spent on roads. But even when these are built, the abnormally high cost of transporting the product of the farms to market must raise the price of Italo-Ethiopian produce considerably above the world price. The difference must be met by the Italian taxpayer, unless Ethiopia's mineral resources are found to be sufficiently attractive to entice big money from the pockets of foreign investors.

No doubt the use of machinery and better methods of cultivation are likely to mean much larger crops than the Ethiopian has hitherto harvested. But the difficulty of having two races living side by side at different levels of civilization while engaged in the same occupations is one which has seldom been satisfactorily solved, except perhaps in New Zealand, where, after a period of fierce fighting, the once-primitive Maori has risen to equality and friendship with the white conqueror.

Hostility to Be Bitter

In every part of Africa in which white colonists have settled on the land, the native is either relegated to special "reserves" or reduced to the level of a day laborer. Any attempt to relegate the Christian Ambara or the Moslem Galla to such a position faces the certainty of bitter hostility and a definite possibility of a mass rising compared with which the recent hostilities would be mere child's play. Only a fraction of the population have been involved in the campaign which has just ended. But they would resist en masse any attempt to deprive them of their rights. On the other hand, to put them on an equality with the Italians is to give their numerical superiority a potent weapon. To steer a happy mean will be by no means easy.

Italy Thanks Sanctions For Aiding Duce's Dream

sponsible to them for management of these funds.

Depression Cause

"There have been two main causes for the fast increase since the war of the intervention of the state in private business. The first is that no countries—except the United States and maybe Russia in the future—can be self-sufficient. In the process of seeking as great an economic autarchy as possible, the state has intervened in concluding trade agreements, in imposing tariffs, in regulating prices. In almost every branch of production political factors have encroached on economic factors.

"The second cause has been the depression, which in nearly all countries has brought the collapse of some banks and the necessity for the state to intervene to save deposits.

"Fascism is not moving toward the nationalization of all private property. On this point Il Duce's words are explicit: "The manifestations of harmonious. Fascism has never thought of reducing them to one common denominator, the state, it has never dreamed of making all national economic activities a state monopoly. They are regulated by the guilds, and the government takes over only those which belong to the sector of national defense.'

"In Italy, these large-scale enterprises play only a small part in industry, four-fifths of which is in the hands of small and medium-sized owners. These enterprises are left to private interests.

"State intervention in big business is taking place everywhere, under one form or another. We are more sincere about it, and don't try to ignore it, as do some governments."

Italy Sees Colony Of 500,000 Whites

Many Soldiers And Workers In Ethiopia Said To Have Asked To Remain

The program of road construction in Ethiopia announced recently marks the beginning of Italy's effort to colonize her newest and most valuable foreign possession.

In this respect Italy is following in the footsteps of ancient Rome, well knowing roads are the first essential in opening backward countries to civilization, says Arnaldo Cortesi in a Rome despatch to the New York Times on May 22. His article continues: Judging from the speed with which the Italian armies penetrated into the heart of Ethiopia, it seems fair to assume that before many months the whole country will be covered by a network of substantial modern highways. Then the real task of colonization and exploitation will begin.

In considering the task confronting Italy, some persons draw parallels between the Italians in Ethiopia and the British in India. However, the two cases, although apparently similar, are in reality quite different.

"Second Italy"

The difference is immediately evident to any one who reflects that the white population of India is composed almost exclusively of soldiers, government officials and a few traders, whereas Premier Benito Mussolini dreams of transforming Ethiopia into a second Italy where thousands of Italians shall settle and find in agriculture their sustenance. What he has in mind is something more akin to South Africa, Canada or Australia than to India.

The pioneer colonists who are to open the way for many that will follow will be soldiers and workers who fought or toiled under Marshals Pietro Badoglio and Rodolfo Graziani to conquer the land they are now to inhabit. The Ministry of Colonies states that thousands of requests have already been received from these soldiers and workers for permission to remain in Ethiopia when they are demobilized.

It is estimated at least 100,000 soldiers and between forty and fifty thousand workers will apply for allotments of land. As soon as they are settled, it is believed, they will send for their families to join them. It is thus foreseen here that this nucleus of a white population for Ethiopia will number about a half-million of the farming class.

The intention is to give each family of settlers a plot of ground, necessary tools and implements and cash to tide them over the first hard years. These loans are to be repaid in annual instalments, ultimately leaving each settler a small landowner.

Highlands Saved for Whites

White settlers will be confined to the highlands, which are suitable for habitation by whites by reason of their temperate climate and the absence of tropical diseases. The lowlands will be divided into large lots and entrusted to agricultural development companies, which are expected to put natives to work under white overseers.

Apart from agriculture, the Italian effort will be directed to developing the principal Ethiopian cities and exploiting whatever mineral resources exist in the country. Addis Ababa, at present a town of about 80,000 inhabitants, is to become a modern city capable of accommodating a white population of 250,000. Harar is similarly to be rebuilt. This work has already begun with the construction on houses for Italian officers and officials.

No one knows exactly what are Ethiopia's mineral resources. Gold and platinum are known to exist in the Wollega region, but it is not known in what quantities. Traces of mercury have been found west of Harar and of silver and lead in other sections. Copper, iron, coal and oil also are said to exist.

All this is still very vague. But the Italians have made up their minds to find out the precise facts as soon as possible. Several commissions are already on the spot, making geological surveys.

Not the least of the problems confronting the Italians is that measures shall be taken to prevent the growth of a large population of half-castes. This danger is serious because Italians do not feel the contempt for blacks that enables Great Britain, for instance, to keep her race pure throughout her far-flung empire. It is a question to which much thought is being given.

One suggestion is that natives be confined to certain regions of Ethiopia and not allowed to enter the zones reserved for white settlers.

which it is hoped will relieve the housing shortage in the capital, is to cost $6,950,000. The initial group of buildings will number 1,000, but the town is being laid out so that 2,000 homes may be added.

The Greenhills project, which will accommodate 1,000 families, will cost $8,700,000; the Greendale project $7,050,000 and the Greenbrook project $7,150,000.

These suburban developments are only one phase of the activities of the resettlement administration. For the acquisition of land for conservation, the Administration has an appropriation of $48,390,000. It is proposed to acquire 9,342,701 acres of land, of which 90 per cent is already under option. After the land passes into the government's hands, $18,000,000 is to be spent planting range grass and other conservation cover to prevent erosion and destruction from dust storms.

The rehabilitation of underprivilieged farmers, those crowding on the relief rolls and unable to borrow money from private lending institutions, is another program on which the Administration plans to spend, $90,000,000. Up to April 10, loan commitments totaling $53,935,000 had been made to rehabilitation clients throughout the farm belt. Of this amount clients in New York State had commitments totaling $357,232, Michigan, Minnesota and Wisconsin each had commitments of more than $1,000,000 each.

AZUKI ARAIKO
The Best Skin Nourisher

The base of AZUKI ARAIKO is red bean powder which has been used as washing powder in this country from ancient times. By a special patent process, a skin-rejuvenating synthetic hormone has been added to AZUKI ARAIKO.

AZUKI ARAIKO cures and prevents freckles and pimples, cleanses, whitens and fundamentally rejuvenates the skin.

As AZUKI ARAIKO is free from soap substances, it is good for weak skin and can be used with mineral or hard water.

US Army War Plan Licenses Industry

official agencies. The selection of the personnel of these agencies would be left to the administrators, as would be the salaries of aides.

As in the 1933 plan, a government corporation with a capital of $500,000,000 and authorized to issue $3,000,000,000 in bonds is provided for to finance war purchases and extend loans to war industries.

The new plan also retains the universal selective draft and press control features of the original plan, which, Senator Clark's report said, would restrict labor activities, permit outright censorship of the press and "permit establishment of an actual operating dictatorship."

Army officers privately expressed the opinion today that the Senate committee's report, apparently made public without knowledge that the 1933 plan was being revised, was extremely critical in large measure because of the War Department's refusal to include the committee's program for a 99 per cent tax on war profits. Settlement of this question, the officers held, did not fall within army jurisdiction.

The Senate committee objected to a part of the army plan which provides for a "public relations administration to combat enemy propaganda, disaffection, and establish rules and regulations for censorship," alleging that this made possible a strict censorship. It is the army view that this clause would make possible merely a voluntary censorship such as that which existed during the World War.

It was also denied that any draft of labor was provided for as the Senate committee asserted, but merely a draft of laborers for military service.

Referring to various bills making up the 1933 army program the committee's report declared:

"The industrial mobilization plan is founded upon certain general principles. Among them are that victory and its prerequisite, increased production, are the primary object of a nation at war to which all other aims are subsidiary, that any control undertaken in war should not be so drastic as to cause any change in normal economic conditions, and that a major part of the planning effort should be devoted to effecting a smooth functioning of the procurement machine rather than profit limitation.

"Starting from these assumptions, the effectiveness of the plan in eliminating the economic evils of war will be limited.

"In case of a major war the cooperation of labor is very important to the successful functioning of the war machinery. The problem of securing such cooperation without necessarily infringing upon established liberties is a difficult one. Testimony covering the industrial mobilization plan indicates that the War Department expects to secure such cooperation by laws and rules which are in fact, although not in name, orders to industrial and other labor to either work or fight or starve.

"The industrial mobilization plan sets up as a controller of labor an administrator of labor who is to be an outstanding industrial leader.

"The War Industries Administration does not provide for any labor representation at all, except on an advisory council which has neither authority nor actual responsibility.

"The committee finds little experience in the last war to indicate that this bill will successfully take the profit out of war and much evidence to indicate that it will not do so.

"The committee finds that under this bill a strict censorship of the press is possible, and finds such censorship undesirable."

Motor On Its Head 'Kicks' Oil To Top

Device Defies Electronic Laws And Taps Deep Supplies Hitherto Unattainable

An electric motor which stands on its head at the bottom of a well and kicks oil to the surface with its "feet" was demonstrated to the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., recently.

The device also defies the accepted laws of electronics. It is the famous "bottom pump." It is the device which brings up the oil discovered 6,500 feet under Oklahoma City.

It is attracting attention as one of the most important discoveries in increasing oil resources, because it will reach oil no matter how deep, and will send up oil not otherwise recoverable, says the New York Times, whose report continues:

The motor has the proportions of a slim fence post. It has to be slim to go down an oil well casing. It can be lengthened indefinitely until it resembles a snake in structure.

A. Rutnoff of Bartlesville, Okla., the inventor, was told by some leading electrical engineers that an effective motor of this beanpole shape was impossible under the laws of electronics.

In principle it is a series of slim motors, each less than the length of an arm, each seven and a half horsepower, one standing on top of the other. The series is rigidly connected.

This driving robot is lowered head down until it is deeply buried in the oil pool. The fluid of the pool keeps the motor cool.

Spins at 3,600 R. P. M.

Its kicking "foot" is a centrifugal pump set directly above the motor. The pump, too, is long and slim—about the proportions of the sign posts set up at city corners to carry street names.

At the bottom of a 6,500-foot well this pump carries in the pipe above it the weight of more than six tons of oil which it is forcing to the surface.

The motor must carry its share of this load. It must spin, under this weight, at 3,600 revolutions a minute, faster than the crusing speeds of airplane engines.

New mechanical problems had to be solved to find bearings—literally the head on which the upside down motor stands—capable of standing the strain.

As wells go deeper, bottom pump inventions are expected to make it possible to tap petroleum supplies which only a short time ago appeared to be beyond man's reach.

Oil wells which supply the gasoline to move vehicles were pointed out today as a new source of paving material over which to move them.

All petroleum contains asphalt, but much of it, because of impurities, has not been utilized for paving. By a new vacuum process of extraction, demonstrated at the exposition, pure asphalt falls like rain out of a cloud of vaporized petroleum.

The still in which this is done was invented by Dr. Sidney Born, director of petroleum research at the University of Tulsa. The stills are towers made of heavy steel, 40 to 60 feet high and 5 to 22 feet in diameter.

Exploded by 6,500 Degree Heat

In the interior of the towers are almost perfect vacuums. Into them is run petroleum from which gasoline and kerosene have been extracted. The liquid is shot into the vacuum tower at 6,500 degrees Fahrenheit, a temperature at which it instantly explodes into a cloud of vapor.

Out of this vapor the asphalt falls, completely pure, in a coalblack rain. By this method a sixty-foot tower, working automatically, can make enough asphalt every day to pave about four miles of road.

Dr. Born says the petroleum asphalt promises a very cheap paving material. He believes it will make pavements as good as anything now in use. The proof of this, he says, is eighteen miles of highway built five years ago between Ada and Fittstown, Okla. The pavement has stood up under the heaviest kind of trucking which uses it to service the Fritts oil pool.

Greater resiliency than possibly any other type of paving material is credited by Dr. Born to this asphalt.

He said that research is planned at the University of Tulsa to discover pigments to control the reflecting power and possibly even the color of asphalt pavements.

Waiter Husband Refuses To Give Up Iraqi Princess

The Iraqi Court Chamberlain left Athens, Greece, on June 2 abruptly with Princess Rajiha for Alexandria, Egypt. Their endeavors had failed to separate Princess Izzade from the waiter to whom she was married the previous week and the Italian consulate had refused the Chamberlain a visa for the Island of Rhodes, where the couple had gone.

It is declared the Iraqi official offered the waiter 25,000,000 drachmas to abandon the Princess, but, it is said, the waiter held out for 42,000,000, says the New York Times. That ended the negotiations.

The drachma is quoted in New York at about nine-tenths of a cent.

Women Say It With Socks In Drive For French Vote

French women suffragists carried their campaign into the opening session of the French Senate on June 2 with socks—old socks.

In efforts to move the Senators, who have been adament against allowing French women to vote, the suffragists dropped socks from the public gallery of the Senate with copies of this message attached:

"When we have the vote we shall still darn your socks."

The Senators were unimpressed, says the New York Times.

Roosevelt Sees A 'No Man's Land'

He Says Recent Court Rulings Leave A Void Between Federal And State Authority

Recent decisions by the United States Supreme Court, including the one on June 2 holding unconstitutional New York State's Minimum Wage Law, were described by President Roosevelt the following day as seeming to create a "No Man's Land" where neither States nor the Federal Government had the right to legislate.

He made this observation in reply to a question at a press conference as to whether he had any statement to make on how the New Deal's objectives could be brought within the framework of the court's decisions nullifying the National Recovery Act, the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Guffey Coal Act and, finally, the one yesterday holding that not even the States could impose schedules of minimum wages.

Mr. Roosevelt said deliberately but with a smile that the question should be redrafted to ask whether he cared to comment on the Supreme Court's decision. He then said that the answer was no, according to the New York Times, whose Washington despatch of June 2 continues:

He paused a moment and puffed a cigarette before he made his observation. He thereafter declined on four distinct occasions in the press conference to discuss possible methods of meeting the situation.

This was his first comment of any kind on decisions by the court since the now historic press conference a little over a year ago in which he said that the Schechter decision invalidating the NRA put the United States back in the horse-and-buggy days.

Fish Sees Demobrats Aided

While the President was making his own mild comment on the decision in the Minimum Wage Law case, Representative Fish, Republican, of New York, was using far stronger language in the House.

The most recent decision is worth 1,000,000 votes to the Democrats, he declared.

On the Senate side, Senator Schwellenback introduced a bill designed to eliminate child labor while adhering to decisions by the Supreme Court outlawing attempts to regulate interstate commerce shipments of goods manufactured by children.

He proposed that States have the right to halt at their boundaries goods manufactured by child labor in other States.

An even temper combined with a determination not to be drawn into a new controversy such as he started with his comment on the Schechter decision marked the delivery of the President's remarks on the Supreme Court decisions.

They appeared to have been thought out with great care, and, while the President may not be quoted directly from his extemporaneous remarks made in press conferences, his observations were substantially as follow:

It will be of great interest to practically everybody in the United States if they will read the three opinions in the New York case—those of Justice Butler, Chief Justice Hughes and Justice Stone—because the combination of the three seems to indicate that at the present time a majority of the court have made clear a fact that aroused special interest in the President because the law under consideration was discussed in his administration as Governor of New York and enacted soon afterward.

It seems to be fairly clear after this decision, using the minimum wage law as an example, that the No Man's Land, where no government can function, is being more clearly defined. The State cannot do some things and the Federal Government cannot do them.

"How will you meet this situation?" the President was asked.

He replied that there was nothing else to be said.

"Do you see a danger in the No Man's Land?" was another question asked in a long series.

To each Mr. Roosevelt replied that there was nothing else to be said.

Not a Party Issue, Says Fish

In his speech in the House, Mr. Fish, who said that he had always defended the Supreme Court, offered a constitutional amendment providing that each State have the power to fix minimum wages for workers.

"I am not criticizing the Supreme Court, but I was fairly shocked at the decision," he said.

He said that Republicans freed 3,000,000 Negro slaves and he called upon both parties now to "emancipate 3,000,000 women and children workers."

It should not be a party issue, he told the House, but a problem for every civilized person to work out in harmony, "to defend the women and children from chiselers and human rats who fatten on the blood of the unprotected workers."

He said he knew his resolution would not be adopted, but he begged "any Democrat to introduce it and fight for it," because if that were done it would mean 1,000,000 votes for the Democratic party this Fall.

While members on both sides of the aisle applauded, Mr. Fish said that he was going to the Republican National Convention with the purpose of urging that the amendment be written into the Republican platform.

More than 3,000,000 women, or half of those engaged in industry in this country, are directly or indirectly affected by the court's decision, Secretary Perkins said today.

In practice "employers must be free to offer and women to accept $4 and $5, or less, for a full week's work," under the decision, she added.

"Public welfare demands that women workers shall be prohibited from accepting wages so low that their health is impaired or is maintained only by contributions from the taxpayers."

The Wunderkind

Karl Witte, the Wunderkind of Lochau, Germany, was the son of a German pastor who met the famous educator Pestalozzi in Switzerland, and applied his theories to the upbringing of his son.

At the age of 4, Karl learned to speak French, Latin and Italian within 9 months. He graduated from high school at the age of 8, and received his degree of Ph. D. at the age of 13. At the age of 16, he received a degree as doctor of laws, and at 23 he was a professor at the University of Breslau. He died in 1883 at the age of 83, the foremost Dante scholar in the world.

Paraguay Decides To Restrict Japanese Imports

Domei

ASUNCION, June 23—The Paraguyan Government has decided to restrict importation of Japanese goods, especially textiles, in order to protect domestic industries, it was revealed here today.

An official statement issued said that Japan at present does not purchase Paraguayan goods and therefore it will be necessary for Japan to establish compensatory commerce if she desires to continue exporting to Paraguay.

Social and Personal Notes

FAREWELL DINNER

A farewell dinner in honor of Dr. de la Morandiere, director of the Maison Franco-Japonaise de Tokio, and Madame de la Morandiere was given by friends of the Maison Franco-Japonaise at the Chuotei restaurant, Marunouchi, at 6 p.m. Monday. About 80 persons attended, including Count Saneaya Hashimoto, Viscount Sukekichi Soga, Rear-Admiral Shinjiro Yamamoto, Dr. Aikitsu Tanakadate, and Dr. Naojiro Sugiyama.

Dr. Sugiyama gave the farewell address to which Dr. de la Morandiere responded. The guests gave Dr. and Mrs. de la Monrandiere a pair of screen paintings by Matabei Iwasa, famous master of Ukiyoye prints, in token of their gratitude for the contribution to cultural relations between France and Japan made by Dr. de la Morandiere.

Dr. and Mrs. de la Morandiere will leave Tokyo soon to spend the summer at Karuizawa before sailing for France in September.

WERE AT HOME

Mr. and Mrs. J. Delano Hitch were at home to a large number of friends Monday afternoon in honor of Miss Marian Dalton, sister of Mrs. Hitch, who recently arrived in Japan.

K.B.S. FILM SHOWN

The Kokusai Bunka Shinkokai showed the film of the Kabuki dance, "Kagamijishi," which was recently made under its auspices, to an invited group of prominent persons at the Imperial hotel auditorium Monday afternoon. Onoe Kikugoro, famed Kabuki actor, took the part of the dancer, interpreting first the dance of a young girl and then giving the famous lion dance. He has given this dance many times at the Kabuki but the film marked his first work before the motion picture camera.

The film, which was made to introduce Japanese dances abroad, begins with an exterior view of the Kabuki theater. It then shows the theater auditorium and later takes the audience behind stage to meet Kikugoro in his dressing room. An explanation of the coming dance is given while the camera shows Kikugoro preparing to make up for his role and while the costumes he is about to use are shown. Mr. Russell Durgin of the Y.M.C.A. gives the English explanation which was prepared the K.B.S.

The dance itself is splendid and particularly in the latter half when Kikugoro gives the lion dance, it is strong, vigorous and magnificent acting.

Following the preview, the K.B.S. gave a tea in rooms adjoining the auditorium for the guests who included prominent Japanese who have been active in the America-Japan society and other organizations fostering international goodwill.

We take this opportunity threfore, as impartial observers of the great political scene, to commemorate this latest achievement of yours, the laying low of Lou Wedemar, in a field outside your chosen profession. In honor of this example of unfailing devotion to duty and courage under fire we have struck off this small medallion in your honor. It will be a monument more enduring than bass, a plaque to which you and New Jersey in the years to come may point with pride.

Sincerely yours,

Robert H. Alford, '36, Princeton, N. J.; Mark A. Beltaire, '37, Detroit; Roderic H. Davison, '37, Auburn, N. Y.; Beauvais Duffy, '36, New York City, co-president of the Republican Club; Robert L. Pritichhard Jr., '37, Kansas City, Mo., political editor of The Nassau Literary Magazine; Thom Riggs Jr., '37, Washington, treasurer of the Veterans of Future Wars; Albert C. Steece Jr., '36, Columbus, Ohio, president of the Democratic Club; Walter Taradash, '36, Hillsdale, N. J., co-president of the Republican Club; John C. Turner, '36, Washington, secretary of the Veterans of Future Wars.

Medal Received in Trenton

TRENTON, June 2.—The medallion to commemorate Governor Hoffman's "rainbow-room championship" was delivered to the Governor's office late today by a telegraph messenger.

Governor Hoffman was reported to have left Trenton for Philadelphia, but the package was opened by his press aide, William S. Conklin. Mr. Conklin said the medal would be delivered to the Governor.

PWA Power Loans To Cities Upheld

Wheat Of District Of Columbia Bench Rules $200,000,000 Program Constitutional

The power program of the Public Works Administration with its policy of lending and granting funds to municipalities for the construction of municipally-owned lighting plants, was upheld by Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat in District of Columbia Supreme Court on June 5.

In sustaining the constitutionality of the program, the Chief Justice ordered the dismissal of the seven suits instituted by four power companies to restrain Secretary Ickes, Administrator of the PWA from allocating nearly $500,000 of its funds to eleven towns in Texas, Alabama, Oklahoma and Iowa, says the New York Times, whose report of June 5 continues: The four companies are the Alabama Power Company, Iowa City Light and Power Company, the Oklahoma Utilities Company and the Texas Utilities Company.

Chief Justice Wheat made three rulings on the case:

1. That the companies had a right to test the constitutionality of the program.

2. That Congress had a constitutional right to delegate powers to President Roosevelt, then to Secretary Ickes, to finance municipal power projects.

3. That Secretary Ickes acted legally in carrying out mandates of Congress in its authorizing legislation.

Case to Reach Supreme Court

Attorneys for the utilities said that they would appeal to the District Court of Appeals. From that tribunal, regardless of its ruling, the case will go to the United States Supreme Court next Fall for final settlement on the constitutionality of the $200,000,000 program.

Chief Justice Wheat's opinion took into consideration the recent ruling of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia which, a month ago, held that the housing provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 were unconstitutional. The Chief Justice, however, pointed out that the higher court opinion in the housing case, which involved the injunction suit brought by the township of Franklin, N. J., against Rexford G. Tugwell as Rural Resettlement Administrator, concerned only the subject of housing.

Funds for the present power program are supplied mainly out of the Emergency Relief Appropriations Act of 1935 and power company counsel relief largely upon the Appellate Court ruling in the Franklin township case when they made their arguments in the current suits.

In the Franklin township case, the Appellate Court held that the housing provisions of the Emergency Appropriation Act of 1935 were fatally defective because they not only illegally delegate legislative power to the Chief Executive but failed to establish policies, standards or criterions for the PWA Administrator in the work relief program.

Section of NIRA is Upheld

The justice ruled that the parts of the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933 and the Emergency Relief Act of 1935 which applied to the Public Works program were constitutional. The section of the recovery act which authorized the public works program was not ruled upon in the Supreme Court's NRA decision.

The government, before today, had already won a key case in its fight to establish the right to make loans and grants for municipal power plant construction. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth District ruled in favor of the government in the suit of the Duke Power Company to restrain PWA from making a loan and grant of $2,952,000 to Greenwood County, S. C., for construction of such a plant.

The South Carolina case will be argued before the Supreme Court in the Fall, and the ensuing decision will be the first effective test on the government's right to finance the publicly-owned power plants.

Justice Wheat quoted liberally from the Appeal Court's decision in the Duke Power Company case.

He cited this finding to support his ruling that Congress had a valid right to delegate power to Secretary Ickes to select projects for financing from public works funds.

Dr. Butler Thinks Landon Can't Win

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, thinks Governor Alf M. Landon, who has been nominated Republican candidate for president, cannot win next November.

Butler, who recently urged the Republican party to awaken to new national problems born of war and depression, sailed on June 5 on the Queen Mary declaring flatly that the Republican hopes in the coming election were marked for disaster if the convention nominated Governor Alf M. Landon of Kansas as the standard-bearer.

Dr. Butler urged the Republicans to nominate a coalition ticket with former Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois as the Presidential candidate and Newton D. Baker for Vice President.

"What will happen if they nominate Landon?" he was asked.

"All depends upon whether they want to win," he replied.

"Can they win with Landon?"

"No," was the emphatic reply.

"You men do not seem to realize," Dr. Butler said, "that we are at the crossing point in world history. It would be ridiculous to nominate any ordinary person. We must have a man who is a statesman. If Elihu Root were not 91 years old he would be the only man possible. Lowden, with the exception of Root, is the only man in the Republican party who has all the qualifications. And remember this, he is not a candidate and does not want it. Yet were I at the convention I would insist that he be drafted."

Dr. Butler said this year's meeting of the European Committee of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace will be of "exceptional importance," because the agenda will include consideration of "what changes in the constitution of the League of Nations should be planned and urged upon public opinion.

Switzerland Assigns 16,000,000 Pounds To Improve Defense

"Neutral" Switzerland is feeling herself forced to arm against dangers from without, with the result that recently the Swiss Parliament voted about £16,000,000 for her defence.

In the first place the new credit is to be allocated for defence against air attack, says The Observer, London, in the following ways:

"1.—Bomb-proof shelters and chemical equipment for the civilian population against poison gas.

2.—Permanent anti-aircraft batteries to be established at Basle, Berne, Zurich, Lucerne, Geneva, and St. Gall. The balance is to be expended on:

1.—Purchase of new aeroplanes.

2.—Construction of tanks (the Army). These are to be of the Vickers light pattern as supplied to the British Army.

3.—Purchase of new mountain warfare guns of the 4.1 Swedish model.

4.—Manufacture—in Switzerland—of anti-tank guns firing 1-lb. shells.

In addition, the Swiss Army is to be reorganized. In place of seven field divisions and two brigades of fortress troops, there are to be six divisions and four fortress brigades. The effect will be to double the cavalry forces behind which the Swiss field army may be mobilized.

Fortification work is also to be undertaken between Basle and the Lake Cantons.

The field army is to be reorganized with a view to making it more mobile. To each division are to be attached 16 tanks, a mechanized artillery brigade, a motorized cavalry division, and an armored car company.

There is also a supplementary credit of about £300,000 for a new squadron of 40 special aeroplanes combining the qualities of chaser planes and bombers. These are to be the first home-made warplanes in Switzerland.

THE CHOICE OF THE MULTITUDE

Gold Stocks Held World Problem

Brookings Institution Study Opposes Credit Expansion To Meet Increase

Predicting that the restoration of the gold standard will become before long an important question of policy in many countries the Brookings Institution, in a study made public on June 2, contended that no existing or prospective deficiency in the supply stood in the way of this development whenever other conditions made such a step advantageous.

"On the contrary," the study held, "a real problem has been created by the great increase in the world's monetary gold stock which has taken place since 1929. A general credit expansion corresponding to this increase in gold stocks is highly undesirable.

"It is important, however, that the sterilization of part of the existing supply not to be accomplished merely by stepping up existing gold reserve requirements and thereby creating a need for proportionately increased increments of gold to take care of future growth."

Dr. Charles O. Hardy, director of the institution's economics branch, who made the study, also found that the inadequacy of the world gold supply was not a factor contributing to the decline of prices between 1924 and 1929, says the New York Times, whose report continues:

The study contains a revised version of the critical analysis made by the institution of the "Warren-Pearson theory," which ended with the following conclusion:

"Exchange manipulation is a well-known form of currency management and is in no sense a Warren-Pearson discovery. The merits of such manipulation as a way to combat depression constitute a highly controversial question which requires separate treatment. Here we are concerned only with the peculiar Warren-Pearson variant of the managed-currency doctrine by a simple comparison of the commodity values of goods and gold. We conclude that their own evidence gives strong support to the contrary position."

In discussing the general problem of gold supply, the study pointed out that although the gold delegation of the League of Nations in 1929 forecast production of $2,749,000,000 in 1931-34, inclusive, the actual production amounted to $3,485,000,000.

The problem of postponing the absorption of the existing supply without expanding credit was stressed with the risk that the world will commit itself to a gold standard with reserve requirements based on the swollen holdings accumulated during the depression.

"Such a development would create a gold shortage," the report said.

French Strikers Occupy Battleship And Two Cruisers

Domei

SAINT NAZAIRE, June 27—The general strike declared yesterday morning reached ominous proportions today as red flags fluttered over the battleship Strasbourg and two cruisers, the Georges Leygues and the Marseillaise, which were added to the list of vessels already occupied by strikers.

Although the flags were at half-mast in memory of two strikers killed in a card game dispute, the incident did not have any connection with the walkout, it was reported

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - - - by Ripley

Norman Thomas Gives Views Of US Socialists

fanatical fervor about Mr. Thomas. He is a big man, with a powerful voice which he knows well how to use. His forehead is prominent and his gray hair, growing back from the temples and the top of the head, accentuates its height. The nostrils of his thin, aquiline nose quivered as he became excited, and his heavy underlip shot outward.

Is 53 Years Old

Norman Thomas was born in Marion, Ohio, fifty-three years ago, of an ancestry liberally sprinkled with Welsh Presbyterian ministers and Scottish Huguenots. He was sickly as a boy and most of his memories up to his sixteenth year are of long stays in bed.

The year he was graduated from the high school in Marion his father, who was minister of the Presbyterian church there, was transferred to Lewiston, Pa., and there young Thomas attended Bucknell College for a year. He had dead Jesse Lynch Williams's tales of Princeton and he finally persuaded a relative who was comparatively wealthy to advance him enough money to attend that university.

Tradition insisted upon the ministry as a career, but the tall lank youth had been enthralled by Walter Wyckoff's "The Workers"; he had heard Debs speak and he found it difficult to reconcile with ethics the hard-fisted economics of the new capitalism. Tradition and parental advice won out for a time, however, and the young graduate of Princeton, after a year's service as a settlement worker in the slums of this city, became a minister.

For eight or ten years he occupied various pulpits in New York, but he found his chief interest not in the church proper but in the settlement houses. It was there, he decided, that he could carry out a practical Christianity.

The war brought his ministry to an end. He could not understand how a preacher of the Gospel of the Prince of Peace could exhort men to fight. He turned to socialism as the sole exponent of pacifism in the troubled world of the time.

Founded Magazine

He founded a magazine, worked on various newspapers and periodicals and became a director of the League for Industrial Democracy, an organization which in colleges and elsewhere is endeavoring to turn men and women toward a new social order.

"Mr. Roosevelt's stand on the Supreme Court," he resumed, "is typical of him. After the first adverse decision he made a statement criticizing it and calling attention to the fact that we were past the 'horse and buggy days.' Since then not a word. Not a word relative to a constitutional amendment limiting the power of the judicial oligarchy. Silence is the price demanded of him by the political and economic system which he supports. He is a Democrat, and, New Deal or Old Deal, he must subscribe to the system."

Above all else, Mr. Thomas is a believer in democracy; but he turns to socialism as the only political system which can save it today. Moreover, he sees an ever-increasing danger of fascism unless socialism is adopted to combat it.

He approves of some of the measures advocated by the Communists and believes that the Socialists should work with them when their objectives are similar.

"Socialism," he said, "differs from communism in the vital matter of tactics and in the emphasis which we place upon the value of freedom now, without waiting for an ultimately perfect socialistic society. I refer especially to those aspects of freedom that we class as civil and religious liberties.

"Both parties are unalterably opposed to the capitalistic system and both seek to found a new system in which there will be production for use rather than for profit. We desire a peaceful change brought about by constitutional methods. The Communists believe that nothing can be effected until a dictatorship of the Communist party is set up by means of a revolution.

"In this country we want no dictatorship, we want no revolution. There are ample constitutional ways of bringing about the change in a peaceful and legal manner."

Dr. Arnold Fanck, the visiting German film director, and his company, will make a film entitled "The New Soil" jointly with Mr. Mansaku Itami, a director of the Nikkatsu Studio, and some Nikkatsu stars.

IMPERIAL AUDIENCE

Dr. Frederick Albert Kammerer, the newly-appointed French Ambassador to Japan will present his credentials to the Throne Thursday.

He will be received in audience by H.M. the Emperor at the Phoenix Hall of the Imperial Palace at 10:30 a.m.

The envoy will later be received in audience by H.M. the Empress.

ASANO RETURNS

Marquis Naganori Asano, last of the feudal lords, proceeded to the Imperial Palace at 10:25 a.m. Tuesday and through Admiral Kantaro Suzuki, Grand Chamberlain to His Majesty, sent in his farewell greetings to H.M. the Emperor.

The 95 year-old political veteran came to Tokyo from Hiroshima recently to pay his respects to Their Majesties the Emperor and Empress.

He left Tokyo for his home by train at 1 p.m. today.

On his way to Hiroshima, the Marquis will stop at the Tsuruya Hotel at Shuzenji for about a week, it is said.

AMERICA-JAPAN SOCIETY LUNCHEON

Dr. Josef Johnson, solar physicist of the California Institute of Technology, will be the speaker at the America-Japan Society luncheon at 12:30 p.m. Monday at the Imperial hotel. His topic will be "This Business of Hunting Eclipses." Other guests will be Dr. Joji Sakurai, Dr. Akitu Tanakadate, Dr. Shin Hirayama, Dr. Takematsu Okada of the Central Meteorological Observatory, Dr. Rikichi Sekiguchi of Tokyo Astronomical Observatory and Dr. Kiyofusa Saotome.

Prince Tokugawa will preside and the American Ambassador and Mrs. Grew will attend. This will be the society's last luncheon until next fall.

PAN PACIFIC

There will be three speakers at the Pan Pacific club's luncheon Friday at the Imperial hotel. They will be Mr. Jules Charbneau, former curator of the Washington State Art Association, Seattle, and lecturer, who will speak on "My Hobby" and who will exhibit 24,000 small curiosities; Mr. Cabot Coville, second secretary of the American Embassy who has recently returned from the United States; and Mr. H. ANNIVERSARY OBSERVED

To celebrate the 50th anniversary of the foundation of the Gakushikai or the Society of the Graduates of the Tokyo Imperial University, a meeting was held at the Gakushikai Hall, Kanda, at 4 p.m., Tuesday.

Baron Yoshiro Sakatani, Dr. Hajime Motoda, Dr. Aikitu Tanakadate, Dr. Tetsujiro Inouye, and Dr. Hantaro Nagaoka were present. They spoke on reminiscences of old days.

FUNERAL SERVICES FOR MRS. FOUJITA

The funeral service for Madame Madelaine Foujita, wife of Mr. Tsuguji Foujita, well known painter, were held at the Sekiguchi Catholic Church, Koishikawa, at 10 a.m. today. Several hundreds of prominent persons, both foreign and Japanese, attended the service. Many artists and members of art societies were present. The night before the funeral, a number of intimate friends of the painter passed the night at Mr. Foujita's home. They were Mr. Keiichi Ishiguro, Mr. Seiji Togo, and members of the Paris Society of Tokyo. Mr. Foujita sketched the face of the late Madame Foujita and will send the sketch to her mother and sister living in France. The studio and residence of Mr. Foujita which was built some years ago according to the design of Madame Foujita, are to be demolished shortly.

BON-ODORI DANCE

A recital of the Bon-odori dance which has been created by Mr. Shoshu Ezaki and Mr. Nosho Omura will be given at the Honganji Temple, Tsukiji, Kyobashi, at 6 p.m. Thursday under the direction of the Japanese Buddhist Musical Society. The members of the society will introduce several bon-odoris and Buddhist songs.

ARRIVING JULY 11

Miss Jacquelin Reifsnider will arrive July 11 to spend the summer with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Reifsnider, in Karuizawa. She is a student in Mills college.

SCHOOL YEAR IS CONCLUDED

Windsor House School, Kobe, commenced its summer holidays last Friday and will reassemble for the Autumn Term Sept 10.

A highly successful term ended with the usual examinations, including those of the London Trinity College of Music and the Royal Drawing Society. The standards reached were of a very high order; the papers being marked on a strictly impartial basis, so that parents and guardians have accurate and unbiased reports of their children's attainments.

Gratifying news was received during the term testifying to the good behavior of past pupils and their attainments in scholarship and sport. One past pupil is to represent her country at the Olympic Games, Berlin, while another was asked as a direct result of her good pronunciation of English to broadcast from a United States of America station.

During the term also the school was visited by Dr. Mallison, the Examiner for the Trinity College of Music, who expressed himself as greatly pleased with the high standard of musical education given in Kobe. Lieutenant Commander Nicholson of H. M. S. Hermes visited the school, and gave an address on the evolution of naval craft. He also congratulated the headmistress and teachers on the smartness and neatness of the school.

At the end of the term Mr. F. Geyer, the gymnastic instructor, who is to be married in July, was presented with a coffee set and a case of silver spoons.

Next term commencing September 10th, the Principal's high ideal of scholarship will be further advanced by the augmentation of the staff, which will again reduce the number of pupils per teacher, making the tutorial system of individual education a greater success than even at present.

SOCIETY FORMED

The inaugural meeting of the India Friends' Society (Indo Koyu Kai) was held Tuesday evening at the Nakamuraya, Shinjuku, and more than thirty persons of various walks of life were present. The organizers were Messrs. Rash Behari Bose, Nikki Kimura, Professor of the Rissho University, and J. Sano, who had been in Dr. Tagore's University for some time. The object of the Society is to promote Indo-Japanese friendship and understanding.

JULY 4TH CELEBRATION

The Y.C. and A.C. will hold a children's sports meet on the morning of July 4th, American Independence day. It will be under the auspices of the American Association of Yokohama but all foreign children, not merely American children, will be eligible to participate.

At 3 p.m. July 4. there will be a baseball game at the Y.C. and A.C., played between Americans of Yokohama and Tokyo. In the evening, there will be a display of fireworks in front of the Hotel New Grand. On July 5, the annual American Association tennis tourney will be played at the Y.C. and A.C.

TO GIVE RECEPTION

The American Consul in Yokohama and Mrs. Boyce will give a reception late in the afternoon of July 4 at the consulate for American citizens.

FRENCHMAN TRANSLATES JAPANESE PRIZE NOVEL

Mr. J. P. Hauchecorne, professor at the Shizuoka Kotogakko is studying Japanese literature enthusiastically. He is the son of Mr. Hauchecorne, French Consul in Kobe, and completed a French translation of "Brother and Sister" by Saisei Muro, noted Japanese writer recently. This novel has been made into a film which is being shown at the Nihon Gekijo, Tokyo, this week, and is greatly appreciated by both foreigners and Japaneses. Because the novel describes the psychological side of Japanese life, Mr. Muro was awarded the literary prize of the Society for the Study of Literature last year.

FREE LUNCH OFFERED PROSPECTIVE VISITORS

Matsubara Park in Tsuruga City is renowned for its picturesque scenery, but, as Tsuruga is far from all large cities, comparatively few people have visited the park. This summer, however, the Tsuruga municipal and railways authorities plan to build a camp village accommodating 1,000 tourists within the compounds of the park.

The tourists coming to the camp village will be given free lunches and will be taken to such scenic sights as Midzushima and Tsunemiya.

JAPANESE SCHOLAR GETS GOVERNMENT AID

Mr. Moto Orishiro, a Japanese resident of Paris, plans to explore Mohammedan regions in Central Asia for six months this year and has asked for the assistance of the Japanese Foreign Office. Mr. Orishiro was born in Niigata Prefecture, was a student at the Military Paymasters' School, the Tokyo School of Foreign Languages and the Tohoku Imperial University. He later went to France and studied the old Arabian and modern Iran languages at the Paris School of Oriental Languages.

Mr. Orishiro will leave Paris for Iraq in early July. The Cultural Affairs Department of the Foreign Office will give assistance to his expedition.

Green-Lewis Feud Nears Open Split

saved it in 1927 by giving it $500,000.

Mr. Green said Mr. Lewis had taken part in the conventions of the A. F. of L., where policies were formulated and decisions made. There the industrial union issue had been dealt with, he said.

Lewis's Letter to Green

The correspondence follows:

Mr. William Green, president
American Federation of Labor,
A. F. of L. Building,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Bill:

I overlook the inane ineptitude of your statement published today. Perchance you were agitated and distraught. The momentary satisfaction accruing to the employers of the steel industry as they persued your statement is also of little consequence.

It is inconceivable that you intend doing what your statement implies, i. e., to sit with the women, under an awning on the hilltop, while the steel workers in the valley struggle in the dust and agony of industrial warfare.

You are the custodian of your own honor. Nevertheless, your own union has declared itself for a definite policy. It calls upon its loyal sons for support of that policy. The imperishable words of Stephen Decatur in Norfolk in 1816 constitute an analogy.

Press accounts detail, without reserve, the intent of the executives of the American Federation of Labor to suspend on July 8 the ten national and international unions who plan to extend aid to the workers in America's unorganized industries. You have uttered no disclaimer. Even so, I cannot yet believe that you would be a party to such a Brutus blow. In addition, you would destroy yourself.

It is known to you that your shipmates on the Executive Council are even now planning to slit your political throat and scuttle your official ship. They are caviling among themselves over the naming of your successor when the perfidious act of separation is accomplished. Why not forego such company and return home to the union that suckled you, rather than court obloquy by dwelling among its adversaries and lending them your strength?

An honored seat at the council table awaits you, if you elect to return.

Very truly yours,
JOHN L. LEWIS.

Green's Reply to Lewis

June 6, 1936.

Mr. John L. Lewis, President International Union, United Mine Workers of America, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir and Brother:

Truth is mightier than the sword. It cuts deeply. Evidently my press statement, filled with truth, affected you that way. That is the only reason I can assign for your most recent letter, which you sent me by special messenger today. No indulgence in any form of poetic language can change the facts. You have made it impossible for the American Federation of Labor to unite and solidify its forces in support of an organizing campaign in the steel industry. The steel barons may get some consolation out of that fact, not out of any action which the American Federation of Labor has taken.

The issue involved, which has grown out of the controversy you raised, is, Shall the federation be maintained and preserved? Shall it be divided or shall it be solidified? I am seeking to maintain it intact and united. This is the basis for every action I have taken and every move I have made. I have appealed, entreated and begged you to join with me in this supreme effort. If you persist in your determination to divide the forces of labor I will still continue to protect and preserve our common heritage, the American Federation of Labor. You, alone, can determine whether you will remain with or leave the American Federation of Labor. That decision rests with you.

Cites Gompers Tradition

The pioneers of the labor movement founded the American Federation of Labor. Samuel Gompers and his associates nurtured and protected it. It has been handed to us with a solemn admonition that we protect it and preserve it. This great parent body created the United Mine Workers of America. It guarded it and made it strong when it was weak. It saved it in 1927, which seems but yesterday, when those who still remain loyal and devoted to its principles and policies contributed more than half a million dollars in order to save it.

I am the president of the American Federation of Labor. I took a solemn obligation to uphold its laws, to be governed by its decisions and to be loyal to its principles and policies.

In the conventions of this great organization decisions and policies were made. You participated in them, submitting an issue which you considered as vital for decision. Every rule of honor and fair play would require that the decision of the tribunal to which you submitted an issue would be respected, obeyed and observed.

Nothing can be offered as a justification for the sacrifice of honor and a solemn obligation. The mandate of the American Federation of Labor convention becomes law to me. There will be no resort to subterfuge or expediency in order to evade the discharge of this solemn obligation. The members of the international union, United Mine Workers of America, would hold me in utter contempt, and rightly so, if I pursued any other course.

Fraternally yours,
WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

Bible, Grimm And Darwin Lead Professors' List

The Bible, Grimm's Fairy Tales and Darwin's "Origin of Species" led in a University of Iowa survey determining "cultural literature," recently.

The Bible rated first, with professors recommending it be read as the best contribution to a cultural background, without regard to its religious significance, says the New York Times.

Professor John W. Ashton of the English Department said that any student who missed Grimm's Tales as a child should repair the loss by reading the book now.

WPA Administrator Attacks Relief Critics

our WPA workers throughout the country as a whole get private jobs.

"Except for New York City and two or three other big cities, the direct relief rolls have all gone down in corresponding degree at the same time. Not more than one-fifth of the men dropped from WPA have gone back to direct relief."

Mr. Hopkins said that as business improves employment does not gain in the same ratio. One factor, he asserted, is the increased productivity of individual workers since the depression began and another is the development of new laborsaving machinery, which, he held, has continued right through the depression.

Further, he said, when industries re-employ men, they take on the last men discharged because they are the most efficient. In many cases these workers have not gone on relief, so that their re-employment does not affect the relief rolls, he asserted.

"Another reason why relief rolls tay up," he continued, "is that they include persons whom industry will not take at this time because they do not measure up to the higher personnel standards which have been developed by industry since the beginning of the depression.

"If there are 100 private jobs to be had in a certain city, you would have to take fifty men from relief if the rolls were to drop in the same ratio as employment increases. What happens is that probably not more than 20 of those 100 jobs go to men on relief."

Mr. Hopkins also said that the number of potential workers increases about 500,000 annually in the United States. If 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 were out of work in 1929 and 10,000,000 were thrown out during the depression, he said, 2,500,000 new workers since 1929 would make a total of 15,000,000.

Puts Jobless at 10,000,000

Subtracting 5,000,000 who have been re-employed, he went on, leaves about 10,000,000 still unemployed. With the same employment as in 1929, he added, there would still be 4,500,000 unemployed today.

These figures, he said, were subject to various qualifications, because of the lack of exact facts as to the amount of employment and other reasons, but he believed that they substantially reflected the situation.

Mr. Hopkins said that he believed in the integrity of the relief rolls as a whole, and that the "chiselers" on relief were a minor factor.

"Every study we have ever made shows that to be the fact," he went on. "We have asked many critics, such as Chamber of Commerce groups, to make their own investigations, and they have invariably reported that the people they investigated really needed more aid than they were getting.

"There have always been people on relief who have had some hidden income. We weed them out as soon as we find out, and some times they come back, and we kick them off again. There always will be some of this, no matter who administers relief."

Denies Politics Is Factor

Replying to charges of politics in relief, Mr. Hopkins said:

"When I was in charge of State relief in New York, the same charge was made, only then the Democrats were making it against the Republicans.

"Before that, when relief was purely a local matter, politics was always charged. Democrats accused Republicans in Republican localities; Republicans accused Democrats in Democratic places.

"Here as there, every man who is refused relief or is turned off relief, looks around for a reason, and many write letters charging that politics was the reason.

"I have investigated hundreds of letters charging that Democrats are given preference and Republicans can not get PWA jobs, and they are just not true.

"Naturally there may be a few isolated cases, but substantially there has been no discrimination on political grounds among the people who get on the relief rolls in America.

"By and large, that goes for direct relief as well as WPA."

U.S. Population Up 3.9 Per Cent Despite Decline In 11 States

There were 127,521,000 persons in the United States on July 1, 1935, the United States bureau of the census estimates.

This total represents a growth of 3.9 per cent over the final population figure of the 1930 census which was fixed at 122,755,046.

The bureau's estimates, held by William L. Austin, director, to be "subject to relatively large errors," showed a decline in population in 11 of the 48 states. Regional shifts were held responsible, says the Christian Science Monitor. The movement toward the west, long an important influence in American history, was found to have slowed down considerably in the five years of the depression.

Florida Outsteps California

Seekers for a warmer climate apparently have headed for Florida rather than California. While the west coast State registered a 0.7 decline in its population, Florida enjoyed a 9.9 per cent increase.

Other states in which decreases were recorded were Rhode Island, Michigan, Wisconsin, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Mississippi, New Mexico, Montana, and Arizona.

An important story of the enormous growth of centralized government under the New Deal is told in the District of Coloumbia population figure. The capital's population increased 22 per cent in the five-year period, from 486,869 in 1930 to 594,000 in 1935. The great influx of government employees since 1933 is held responsible.

13 Trail D. of C.

Thirteen states now have less population than does the little square of territory on the banks of the Potomac, set aside by George Washington as the site for the Government of the United States.

New York State still remains the most highly populated of the 48 with 12,889,000 inhabitants, an increase of 2.4 per cent over 1930. Pennsylvania is second, with 10,066,000; Illinois, third, with 7,817,000; Ohio, fourth, with 6,707,000 and Texas fifth, with 6,077,000.

Fastest growing states in the five-year period were South Carolina, with a 15.7 per cent increase; Georgia, 15 per cent; Tennessee, 11.0; and Florida, 9.9 per cent.

The census bureau's estimates are based on school records, principally enrollment and school census statistics. Director Austin refuses to vouch for their accuracy, declaring that only by national population census, which will not be taken again until 1940, is it possible to secure exact data on the widespread shifts in population caused by several years of depression.

Daughter of British Ambassador Is Bride at Beautiful Wedding

Miss Amy Katherine Clive, only daughter of the British Ambassador and Lady Clive, became the bride of Mr. Geoffrey Wedgwood Harrison at a beautiful wedding at St. Andrews church, Shiba, early this afternoon. The Rev. C. K. Sansbury officiated in the presence of 180 guests.

Wearing a wedding dress of traditional white satin with a long train and a veil of Spanish lace and tulle and carrying a bouquet of white irises, the bride entered on the arm of her father who gave her in marriage.

The bridal attendants were from the British Embassy. Bridesmaids were Miss Sophie Harrison, sister of the groom, Miss Virginia Bell, daughter of Mrs. J. Dodd, little Patricia Chappell, daughter of the British Air Attache, and little Betty Holmes, daughter of the British Consul General. Peter Kermit, small son of the British Consul, and Simon Rawlings, small son of the British Naval Attache, were pages. Mr. Ashley Clarke, first secretary at the British Embassy, was best man and ushers were Mr. W. J. Davies, Mr. George Andrews, Commander G. C. Ross, Lieut. Holmes, and Mr. H. R. Sawbridge. Mr. H. M. Brian was organist.

Among the wedding guests were, in addition to the bride's parents, the mother of the groom and his two sisters, Miss Sophie Harrison who was one of the bridesmaids, and Miss Isabel Harrison, and his cousin, Miss Vincent, who had come from England especially for the wedding.

Immediately after the service, a reception was held for more than 500 friends of the young couple at the American Embassy. During the afternoon, the American Ambassador, Mr. Joseph C. Grew, proposed a toast to the bride and bridegroom to which Mr. Harrison responded.

The gift of Foreign Minister and Empress is a beautiful gold letter cabinet and that of Her Majesty the Empress Dowager is a lovely silver vase. H.I.H. Princess Chichibu sent large, handsome black lacquer box with red flowers in exquisite workmanship. H.I.H. Princess Takamatsu sent a jewel box with inlaid woodwork and silver in a beautiful design.

The gift of Foreign Minister and Mrs. Arita is an exquisite fitted silver cabinet and that of members of the Gaimusho is a lovely lacquered bowl of special design.

Guests at the reception included the diplomatic corps, members of the British colony in Tokyo and Yokohama, prominent Japanese, and members of the international colony. It was an especially enjoyable reception as the bride and groom are popular in diplomatic and international circles and in addition, this was the last big social event before the summer holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison are leaving for a wedding trip to the Kansai. They will be at home after July 8 at the British Embassy. This morning a civil wedding service was performed at the British Embassy.

Badoglio Shown As Peace Lover

Holds War Is To Be Deprecated Unless Justified By Higher Aim Than Lust Of Conquest

Marshal Pietro Badoglio, on the eve of the celebration of his victory in Ethiopia, revealed himself in an interview on June 6 as a convinced lover of peace.

The Viceroy of Ethiopia holds that war is a thing not to be desired for its own sake but as a means to an end, a visitation sometimes unavoidable, but always to be deprecated unless its bloodshed and destruction are justified by some higher motive than mere lust of battle or conquest, such as the opening of new fields for human work and endeavor, says Arnaldo Cortesi in a Rome despatch to the New York Times on June 6. His article continues:

He regards war as a painful trial that all men worthy of the name must face with fortitude, but that they must forget as soon as possible. He is living up to this principle, and the campaign he has just brought to such a brilliant close is little more than a pale memory with him if his reluctance to speak of it is a criterion of the relative place it occupies in his thoughts.

Gives His Troops the Credit

The only aspect of it about which he talks with pleasure is the endurance, enthusiasm and valor shown by his men. Of his own share in winning the war he says nothing. He gives all the credit to his troops.

He is more inclined to look forward to Ethiopia's future than back on the campaign.

"The exploitation of Ethiopia," he says, "is a problem of great vastness and complexity, but Italy intends to solve it within the shortest possible period of time.

"She will set about her task, however, without undue haste because she cannot afford to make any mistake. Everything must proceed according to carefully preordained plans, on which we are working at present.

"Our task is rendered arduous by the fact that we know comparatively little of Ethiopia. Large tracts are marked unexplored on the maps. These parts will have to be carefully explored before we can lay any final plans.

"Another difficulty is that Italy wishes to respect the rights of the native populations and has no intention of dispossessing any tribes or individuals that had a legal right to the land. It is consequently impossible to grant any allotments to white settlers until the question of ownership has been investigated.

"A start may be made in the lands formerly belonging in their own right to the former Negus and rases who have fled the country, but for the rest it will be necessary to wait."

Will Spread Civilization

Meanwhile, however, the marshal said, Italy will extend her influence over and carry civilization into Ethiopia with the help of roads, the construction of which has already begun; doctors, whose healing work, he believes, is one of the forces that will most surely attract the natives, and justice, which, he declares, will follow the Italians wherever they go. Other vehicles of civilization, such as schools, will not be long in coming.

"All the above," he continued, "forms part of the preliminary period, which may be termed the period of penetration and which will be over, in my opinion, in four or five years.

"I do not mean to imply that no colonists will settle in Ethiopia before then. Indeed, it seems certain that scores of thousands of men who are already there have no intention of leaving. What I mean to say is that it may be four or five years before the next period, which may be termed the period of exploitation, is in full swing."

Predicts Colonial Success

Marshal Badoglio predicted that people who had said that Italy would never succeed in conquering Ethiopia and who were now consoling themselves with the thought that she would fall down on the job of colonization were destined to be disappointed. Ethiopia, he said, has vast expanses of fertile land and the climate is good, so there is no reason why it cannot become a second Italy for some hundreds of thousands of Italians.

He declared himself unable to say, however, how soon it would be before the bulk of the Italian forces could be withdrawn, pointing out that taking effective possession of a huge territory almost entirely devoid of roads was a task that would require much time.

"I cannot even begin to tell you how proud I am of my soldiers," he concluded. "I make so bold as to say that many armies that enjoy reputations greater than ours for colonial warfare never would have succeeded in conquering Ethiopia.

"There are plenty of good soldiers in the world, but few who can turn their hands from rifle to pick and shovel with the ease of the Italian.

"The valor with which my men fought and the enthusiasm with which they worked, their contempt for danger, their willingness to put up with hardship, their physical endurance and their dash almost surprised me, who knows them well and who was expecting very much of them, but it would have been a real eye-opener to many people. I wish more of our critics could have seen them."

Yo-Yo Champion?

One of the favorites for the forthcoming yo-yo championships of New South Wales is—a female orang-outang.

Freda, from the Zoo at Sydney, has made such progress with the game that Mr. Ives, an American expert, holds great hopes of her chances.

If she wins or gains a place, she will be presented with one of the sweaters to be given to the prize-winners.

The Reason

"Don't you think the water is rather hard?"

"Possibly—you see it rains quite hard here."

Hoffman Angered By Students' Gift

Presentation Of Medal For His Fight With Reporter Termed 'Freshmaniac Juvenility'

Governor Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey expressed calm indignation on June 3 at Trenton, N. J., over the presentation to him the previous day by a group of Princeton undergraduates of a silver-plate medal in "recognition" of his recent fistic encounter in New York with a newspaper man. He termed the action "sophomoric" or "freshmaniac juvenility."

On the medallion, brought to the Governor's office by a messenger boy, the Governor was caricatured, says the New York Times, whose report of June 3 continues:

The medal was inscribed: "Rainbow Room Championship." It bore also the sentence: "King Kong Hoffman, 208 pounds, vs. Lou Wedemar, 120 pounds," and under a drawing that showed "King Kong" holding his opponent in his hand was the legend: "Matter Over Mind."

In a statement today Governor Hoffman gave details of his encounter with Wedemar. The statement said:

"Thirteen young men of Princeton University have been persuaded to set their signatures to a prepared letter which has been sent to me with a metal plaque purporting to commemorate my encounter with a newsapaper reporter in New York on May 18 of this year.

"It is interesting to note that the representative of a Trenton newspaper asked me some days before the receipt of this communication if it had yet come into my hands.

"The encounter upon which this communication was based has been regarded by me as a closed subject. Since there seems to be a disposition to reopen it, I shall state the facts as they occurred—a course which I hesitated to take until a few days ago. The facts might imply conclusions inimical to the interest of the other participant in the encounter. I have no grievance against Mr. Wedemar and no desire that he should suffer for an unconsidered action, taken without proper regard for the natural consequences.

"Mr. Wedemar approached me while I was speaking with a lady at a public function.

"He addressed me with an unprintable term. I sought to pass the insult off without disturbance. He repeated the term with added emphasis. I asked him to leave the room with me. When we had attained privacy, I asked him to apologize for his language, being willing to drop the matter if that was done.

"Mr. Wedemar refused to apologize and I knocked him down.

"So much for what happened. The public comment has concerned itself with what did not happen. Let me dispose of the imaginary details one by one.

"There was no mention of the Lindbergh case.

"There was no mention of the next day's election or its possible result.

"I did not strike Mr. Wedemar without warning, nor did I hold his arm while I hit him. If Mr. Wedemar is so unfamiliar with normal life that he does not know that the use of the term he applied to me, when not followed by an apology, invites punishment, Mr. Wedemar's education has been more neglected than his vocabulary.

"No member of my staff was present at the encounter. Nobody connected with me held Mr. Wedemar down or picked him up.

"So far as the advertised disparity of weight is concerned, it was Mr. Wedemar's choice. The next time he wished to offer to a Governor the insult of fighting words he should pick a Governor in his weight class.

"I am sorry that Princeton University, one of the oldest and finest institutions of higher learning in the world, should have been used as the background for this outburst of sophomoric—or shall I say freshmaniac—juvenility. It would be regrettable if outside observers should conclude that the same mental attitude which sought reward for future military service is also responsible for a disposition to subscribe to collective insults against citizens, who, heretofore, have had a prejudice against the use of paddles in classrooms.

Queen Honors Fokker For 25 Years In Aviation

Using a self-designed and self-constructed air machine, Anthony H. G. Fokker twenty-five years ago obtained a pilot's license. Celebrating this event, crowds in Amsterdam, The Netherlands, on June 6 thronged the Amsterdam airfield to witness an air circus.

Queen Wilhelmina not only sent a represeniative but also conferred the Order of the Netherland Lion on the noted airplane designer, reports the New York Times. Among those at the celebration were Cabinet members and high-ranking military officers. The city of Amsterdam gave Mr. Fokker its silver medal.

Sendai Society Holds Its First Soiree Saturday

Seikokwai Student Center Presents Program Of Plays And Music

The Seikokwai Student Center of Sendai presented its first Soiree in the Parish Hall of Christ Church Saturday evening June 27. The Student Center, an organization of English clubs, discussion group, Bible classes, and other groups, is closing its second year of activity among the young people of the city of Sendai. Saturday evening the Center was host to an estimated audience of about three hundred with a varied program.

Following the greeting which was given by the director, Mr. Donald L. Zoll, the mixed chorus under the leadership of Mr. Mitsuo Seimiya, assistant to the director, sang a choral. Two brief addresses, a demonstration of the Discussion Club and more music by the Singing Club comprised the first part. Part two was sponsored by the Businessmen's Club which presented a farce in two scenes illustrating the "Influence of the Student Center upon the Commerce and Industry of Sendai". Outstanding performers of this skit were Mr. Moriya of the Yasuda Bank, Mr. Seino of The Japan Tourist Bureau, Mr. Ogawara of Mitsubishi, Messrs. Asaka and Suzuki of the Mitsukoshi Department Store, Messrs. Miyagi and Seimiya of the Seikokwai and the Rev. Mr. Draper. From the laughter and applause which this part evoked, it seemed that this was one of the most enjoyable features of the entire program.

Based upon an incident during the early life of the Sendai Student Center when a petition was presented to the local theaters requiring the adoption of a Benshi-less program, the first scene entitled "Punkan Kinema" depicted in an amusing fashion the improvement which the eventual acceptance of such a petition entailed. The second scene which was laid in the "Mar-Sun Book Store" revealed the startling difference in the efficiency of two salesmen. One salesman played by Mr. Seimiya, indolent, crude and hopelessly stupid earns a just reprimand from his manager, played by Mr. Ogawara whereas the other salesman played by Mr. Seino was courteous, efficient, and skilled in the use of English which as he informs the manager and the audience he developed under the guidance of the Student Center Businessmen's Club. The curtain falls on the manager's glowing tribute to his good salesman to whom he awards a raise in salary.

The last part of the program was devoted to the presentation by the Nikoo and Girls English Clubs of the play in English, "Rip Van Winkle". Mr. Shigeru Watanabe, a teacher of the Tohoku Gakuin starred in the title role. The scene was laid in the courtyard of an inn. The play opens with the oratorical harrangue by a political speaker who exhorts his hearers to send to congress "those who are imbued with the spirit of '76". His speaking was raucously interrupted by the approach of a mob of young boys played by Chugaku boys of the Tohoku Gakuin. They point out a tattered, decrepit and feeble old man who proves to be the Rip Van Winkle who has been asleep in the Catskill mountains for 20 years. The play which was costumed by the Owada Costume Shop of Tokyo and admirably interpreted by the youthful performers was a fitting climax to this new experiment in entertainment.

The Soiree was ended with the audience and performers joining in singing the song of the Student Center, "Auld Lang Syne". Patrons were the Rt. Rev. N. S. Binsted, the Rev. M. William Draper and Mr. Keiichi Kurosawa of Ginza, Tokyo.

Anti-Hitler Staff Quits Paris Paper

offer was to preserve the political anti-Nazi attitude of the paper. Mr. Poliakoff refused this offer although he was badly in need of funds.

"On June 5, shortly after my arrival here, I received a cable informing me that Mr. Poliakoff had dismissed me and that he was negotiating for the sale of the paper. Since then I have received no word from him as to my status on the paper.

"Today I received a cablegram from Mr. Poliakoff which did not mention my dismissal but instead asked me for aid against the stoppage of my associates. I wish to express my solidarity with my colleagues. I will stand with them in this situation as I am sure they will stand with me.

"My colleagues have cabled me that beginning tomorrow there will appear our new paper the Pariser Tageszeitung. Friends of our struggle for human rights and for the liberation of the German people from the Nazi terror have given the capital for starting the new paper but we hope that this undertaking will receive the support of American friends of human liberty."

Balbo's 40th Birthday Spent In African 'Exile'

Marshal Italo Balbo, commander of the Italian mass flight to Chicago, celebrated his fortieth birthday on June 5, as Governor of the North African colony of Libya, where he has been for three years. His position, regarded by many as "banishment" from Rome, may hold him for another two years.

Marshal Balbo's name is mentioned always when conversation turns to possible successors to Premier Benito Mussolini. Three years ago he was one of the most popular Fascisti in Italy, says the New York Times. But three months after his return from his flight to Chicago Mussolini displaced him as Minister of Aviation and consigned him to the comparative obscurity of Libya. The marshal's friends say the experience has sobered and matured him and they expect to see his return in a new if less spectacular triumph.

Say Oxford Group Is Political Hope

Speakers At Stockbridge Offer It As Substitute For Socialism, Communism And Fascism

The Oxford Group offered itself at the June 5th session of its first national assembly in America at Stockbridge, Mass., as a substitute for socialism, communism and fascism. The theme was developed by speakers at an outdoor meeting attended by 1,500 men and women, in the presence of Dr. Frank N. D. Buchman, founder of the movement.

The speeches were presented as individual "God-guided thinking," which the speakers had "checked" in accordance with the usual practice of the movement, says the New York Times, whose report continues: After periods of silent communion, known in the Oxford Group as "quiet times," periods in which, it is asserted, thoughts come directly from God, the speakers submitted their "guidance" to the judgment of the leading fellows in the group at the morning planning session under Dr. Buchman.

From this checked "guidance" it was decided that God wanted to give today to a "political meeting." Among other political aims, speakers proposed specifically that those whose lives have already been "changed" by the Oxford Group should do their best at the impending Republican and Democratic National conventions "to change" enough politicians to influence the conduct of the campaign.

Hope for Political Reforms

They expressed the hope that Republicans and Democrats both might be "guided" to avoid empty campaign promises, the spoils system of pledging jobs as campaign rewards and the improper use of money.

"The change must be from self-direction to God direction," said H. Alexander Smith of Princeton, lawyer and treasurer of the New Jersey Republican State Committee, who will leave here Sunday to go to the Cleveland convention with the New Jersey Republican delegation.

He acted today as chairman, otherwise "introducer of the life-changing team."

"The situation looks almost hopeless for any change in the existing system," Mr. Smith continued, "but we have here a cure for the evil forces in both Republican and Democratic parties which threaten us with destruction."

His suggestion for the reform of the old line political platforms, patronage and corruption was applauded by Miss Mary E. Hughes, who, as head of the women's division of the NRA, mobilized the women of the nation for the Blue Eagle campaign of 1933.

"What will the Republicans do in Cleveland?" Miss Hughes asked. "What will the Democrats do in Philadelphia? In this crisis through which the nation is passing, the most dramatic triumph would be the triumph at these conventions of spiritual values over localized self-interest and the triumph of the sovereignty of God-guided control."

Former Communist Speaks

The substitution of the Oxford Group for communism, socialism and fascism was urged particularly by James T. Watt, former Communist organizer for the Fifeshire District in Scotland, and by George Light, for twenty-five years a British Laborite. It was ratified by Carl Vrooman, who was Assistant Secretary of Agriculture in the administration of President Wilson.

"When I gave myself to communism," said Mr. Watt, "I believed it was trying honestly to solve the problems of the people. Now I see in the Oxford Group the greatest redemptive movement in the world, which can reconcile the warring elements in society, class and class, creed and creed, not only in this country but in every other country of the world.

"I believe honestly the Oxford Group includes the best elements of communism, the best elements of fascism, the best elements of all that stands for conservatism in the world, and is the only revolution for the society in which we live."

Mr. Light said he believed for a long time that the Socialist movement "was the only hope of the world."

Mr Vrooman, as a commentator on the American political scene, said that government "has degenerated into a struggle between sordid selfish special interests" and that "the Oxford Group offers the solution" for this struggle.

All Isms Called Wanting

Donald G. Ross, Toronto lawyer, said that "young people feel the old order should change but that all the isms have been tried and found wanting."

An actual submission of New Deal problems for God's guidance was recounted by Robert W. Hudgens of Greenville, S. C., regional director of the Resettlement Administration for the Southeastern States.

"About a year after I surrendered my life to God and identified myself with the Oxford Group," he said, "I was sent to New Orleans to one of the largest Federal agencies to see that that agency was kept out of politics in Louisiana. About two days after I reached New Orleans, Senator Huey Long sent a representative to discuss organization and patronage.

"We had a long and interesting talk during which I told Senator Long's representative about my surrender and that I was planning to make every decision and every appointment under God's guidance. I told him that I would not argue with him about any plan or any appointment but that I would pray with him about anything we had to decide and would be willing to act on the guidance that came to both of us.

"The next day Senator Long sent word that if I got into any trouble by being honest I should let him know. I found that in politics, just as in my bond business after I was changed, the best political strategy is to go into every controversy with God's guidance and with every defense down.

"God is the wisest political boss."

U.S. Midshipmen Sail For Europe

New Seniors And Sophomores Board Three Battleships For Three Months' Cruise

The 489 members of the second, or junior, class were left at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., on June 5 as the battleships Arkansas, Wyoming and Oklahoma, with 1,115 aboard, steamed down the Chesapeake Bay, headed for Europe.

The Arkansas, flying the flag of Rear Admiral Wilson Brown, led the other two warships on the cruise, says the New York Times, whose report of June 5 from Annapolis, continues: There were 346 seniors and 769 sophomores aboard.

With the midshipmen were six West Point cadets. Cadets Donald W. Trackery of Wakefield, Mass.; Lawrence O. Baldwin of New York City and L. E. Coria of Lockhaven, Pa., are on the Oklahoma. Cadets Richard A. Broberg of Torrington, Conn.; Paul C. Davis of Orange, N. J., and Harvey P. Barnard of Westfield, N. J., are on the Arkansas. They were sent after Rear Admiral David Foote, Sellers, superintendent of the academy, invited the military academy authorities to send several cadets on the cruise. A group made the cruise last year.

The second class remained at the academy for practical instruction and aviation training. They will make cruises of a month's duration on destroyers, going as far up the Atlantic Coast as Newport. The first of the three cruises will last from Monday to July 3, with one-third of the class aboard.

The new freshman class will be formed during the Summer, the first members being expected about Thursday. A class of about 730 is expected before the start of the next academic year.

The cruising midshipmen will be in New York for a day and a night late in August.

After their return to the academy, the cruise midshipmen, with the second-class men, will receive a vacation until Sept. 25. The football squad will return ahead of the other cruise midshipmen, so they can get in their annual leave and report early for Fall practice.

The Navy crew squads are training here for the intercollegiate regatta at Poughkeepsie on June 22. After the race about thirteen midshipment will travel by commercial liners to join the cruise battleships at Gothenburg, Sweden.

The traditional scenes surrounded the embarkation of the midshipmen today. All morning the white-clad men struggled between Bancroft Hall and the Reina Mercedes dock carrying luggage to a fleet of eighteen motor launches.

At 12:30 p.m., while the academy band played, the midshipmen fell in on the terrace of Bancroft Hall and marched to the launches. They passed between lines of cheering and applaunding parents, sweethearts and friends. The boats shoved off and headed for the battleships, the midshipmen giving the traditional cheers for "mothers, sisters and sweethearts."

Admiral and Mrs. Sellers took about forty parents of midshipmen on the superintendent's yacht Anita Clay, and followed the fleet of launches to the warships.

Wallace Predicts Revival If No War

US Official Says World Wave Will Obviate Need For Further Federal Control Of Crops

Only a European war can prevent restoration of economic prosperity throughout the world in the opinion of United States Secretary of Agriculture Wallace.

On the basis of present trends in domestic and foreign trade, he predicted that, unless an armed conflict interfered, the United States was due for a prosperity wave of such proportions as to make unnecessary any further attempts at Federal control of production in agriculture, according to the New York Times. The report from Washington, D.C., on June 6 continues:

The Secretary had been discussing the political situation, joking with reporters about the probable Republican farm plank when he was asked whether, in his opinion, some form of production control would be needed to replace the invalidated AAA comodity programs. Becoming serious, he replied:

"I don't think so, because I think business recovery in both this country and abroad will make it quite capable of handling the situation. I bank a good deal on a return of both world prosperity and prosperity in this country. The only thing I can see standing in the way is the possibility of another armed conflict."

Stating that he could not agree with the suggestion that a war abroad would revive our diminished export outlets, he added:

"Leaving out the question of armed conflict, there are prospects of sufficient recovery or pick-up to carry us along with the powers available after 1938."

Production Control in Reserve

It is in 1938 that the existing soil conservation program, designed to shift 30,000,000 acres from intensive cropping to grass, would be turned over to the States for administration with the Federal Government retaining only an advisory capacity.

Mr. Wallace agreed, however, that the idea of production control should not be lost sight of and that some mechanism for adjusting agricultural output to domestic and world demand should be kept constantly available for ready use. To this end he said the AAA was working on proposed model State laws that would enable it to apply the controls when needed.

He pointed out that weather conditions and foreign trade held the answer to whether resort to production control in farming would prove necessary. If weather was normal and a foreign trade revival failed to materialize, some form of controlled production would probably prove necessary, he said.

Graduated Payments Upheld

Mr. Wallace defended the proposed graduation of benefit payments under the soil-conservation program which were reported favorably to the Senate recently by the Agriculture Committee. The new basis would provide a reduction in payments to large corporation farms.

Specifically, the new scale would cut payments to cooperating producers by 50 per cent after the first $50,000. After $2,000 the rate of payment would be reduced by 1 per cent per $1,000 to which the farmer was eligible.

A different basis of graduation, contained in an amendment to the Jones-Costigan Sugar Bill reported to the House by the Agriculture Committee, would reduce payments between $2,000 and $10,000 by 25 per cent and those above $10,000 by 50 per cent.

Mr. Wallace denied that the proposed reduction in rate of payments was an attempt to break up large landholdings. He said that if such were the intention the administration probably would drive for passage of a measure appropriating large amounts for loans to tenants to enable them to buy the farms they now operate as renters.

Oxford Group Sets Course For Youth

group a week ago. I had not been doing very much with my life. God told me that in my 'quiet time' in no very uncertain terms. The work is a pleasure."

Many 'Changed' at the Assembly

Roughly estimated, more than two hundred other persons, "changed" since the opening of this assembly, are tramping happily around the Berkshires during this closing weekend, being trained as "life changers" by Dr. Frank N. D. Buchman, founder of the movement and now directing its first general assembly here.

It was to restrain their ardor in returning to the home fields of "unchanged lives," known here as "pagans," that the discourse of the nature of the movement was pronounced today by Mr. Twitchell.

"I am not elaborating any system," he said, "or giving any technique or method. I only want to give you certain headings for your own guided thinking.

"First, speak only from experience. That is the real authority in a work like this. Let us make sure of this, the most important fact of all, that a man can have an experience of God. If you and I mistake that factor, it is like trying to describe the solar system and leaving out the sun.

"Second, begin where you are. Many of us try to force ourselves into a belief when we have no evidence for that belief. When I first met the Oxford Group twelve years ago, I said: 'I don't believe.' A a member of the Group said: 'Of course you don't believe; you have no contact with God, so why should you believe' Remember that experiment leads to experience and that experience leads to conviction."

Among the speakers drawn from the "youth", of the Oxford Group here, the benefits of surrender of a life to God, "sharing" faults and restitution for them, were described by persons as diverse as Masatane Mitani, a Japanese mission secretary from Tokyo, and Elizabeth Morris, a Vassar student.

"I am fully convinced," said Mr. Mitani, "that the experience of surrender and restitution would also convince all my friends and my nation of God."

Other "youth" witnesses told of the benefit of their "changed" lives. The most youthful was Harry Doran of Flagstaff, Ariz., who said he was 10 years of age and looked younger.

He said that he and his sister used to obey their father and mother only because they feared punishment. Now the whole family has been "changed," including Harry and his sister, and the children now dispose of the temptation to disobey their parents by having a "quiet time."

At one of the house-party meetings of the assembly today, Harry Blair, Assistant United States Attorney, said he had no objection to any one knowing that he became "identified" with the Oxford Group last February when struggling with a number of difficult legal problems, and that he now finds "a quiet time every morning gives me a better start for the day."

Processed Silk Said Successful Wool Substitute

Formal Exhibition Test To Be Conducted Here Thursday

The effort of the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry to make stuff for foreign clothes from silk with the co-operation of the silk laboratories and schools concerned and so meet the situation consequent on the suspension of the import of wool from Australia has been crowned with success. This successful method will be put to a formal exhibition test at the conference of sericultural officials to be opened Thursday, it is reported.

The method in question is to frizzle raw silk like wool by applying a special chemical process. This special kind of stuff, properly woven, makes clothes superior to woollen textiles, it is contended. Clothes made with this special stuff are thought to be superior to those of staple fibres in that the former retains warmth better.

The present method is understood to be an improvement on the method hitherto in use which consists in obtaining a special kind of stuff by mixing a portion of wool with raw silk.

By using this stuff, it is understood to be possible to make clothes at a comparatively low cost. This invention is confidently regarded by the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry as having practically solved the wool problem which has been lying heavily on the mind of the Japanese nation, it is understood.

Monopoly Assailed As Foe Of Real Freedom

stitutional question.

The audience which heard Mr. Roosevelt directly listened with evident interest and punctuated his remarks with frequent applause.

Links Yeomanry and Democracy

The President opened his speech with a description of the new trend toward travel by the people of the country and expressed the hope that as many as possible might visit this exposition, the principal one commemorating Texas's liberation from Mexico.

He soon began his basic topic by recalling that Texas, "in a period of monopoly, combinations, overcapitalization, high rates and discrimination against the small shipper," had pioneered in the field of regulating utilities. He then went on to describe how this State set up anti-trust laws in "the old Texas spirit of freedom for the individual."

"In our national life," Mr. Roosevelt went on, "public and private, the very nature of free government demands that there must be a line of defense held by the yeomanry of business and industry and agriculture, not the generalissimos, but the small men, the average men in business and industry and agriculture, those men who have an ownership in their business and a responsibility which gives them stability.

"Any elemental policy, economic or political, which tends to eliminate these dependable defenders of democratic institutions, and to concentrate control in the hands of a few small, powerful groups, is directly opposed to the stability of government and to democratic government itself."

Mr. Roosevelt declared that, "if the tendency in the dozen years following the World War had been permitted to continue, the inevitable consequence would have been the destruction of the base of our form of government." In its place, he added, would have come "an autocratic form of government."

Mr. Roosevelt pointed out that, as the result of experience demonstrating that State efforts to "restore democracy in opporunity" had only caused evil practices to "jump over the boundary line into some other State," the Federal Government had already taken steps to regulate commerce, banking and the sale of securities.

"The more progressive of the States may do their share, but unless the action of the States is substantially uniform and simultaneous the effectiveness of reform is nullified—crippled by the chiselers who, like many other evildoers, are, alas, still with us," he said.

The crowd which was packed into the stadium represented only a small fraction of the persons who came to Dallas by train and automobile for today's events. One railroad alone reported that it had brought in eight special trains.

City officials estimated that the influx of visitors for the day practically doubled the normal population of close to 300,000. It seemed that every one of these was present among the huge crowds that greeted the President before his speech, when he drove through the city streets and the exposition grounds.

Mr. Roosevelt was driven into the great Cotton Bowl at the head of a long procession which had traversed the length of the city.

League Defended By Carnegie Group

European Committee Of Peace Organization Opposes Change In Geneva Covenant

Members of the European committee of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace unanimously agreed on June 15 in London, that there should be no changes in the covenant of the League of Nations.

They held the difficulty was not the League or its constitution but the ineffective use of the League by the chief powers concerned, according to the New York Times. The decision followed a meeting there celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the European center of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of the organization, in an address to the delegates, declared nothing but "human incompetence" had prevented the League from achieving its aims.

Points in Butler Address

Mr. Butler's address, as made by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, was in part as follows:

What is it that has prevented the League of Nations from achieving more completely its noble aim? The answer is simple, direct and clear: human incompetence. Man is still so far from having risen in knowledge and capacity to the full height of responsibility for the conduct of democratic government that he is called upon time and again to meat the colossal cost of his failure.

"In one democracy after another, the power over government of self-seeking pressure groups, acting in the interest of closely organized and ambitious minorities, has weakened democracy as a form of government resting upon a general national opinion, precisely as conflicting groups fighting over ecclesiastical non-essentials have weakened, and indeed are almost destroying, the power of Christianity.

"Given incompetence in the administration of democracy, the rise of dictators cannot be prevented. Men must have effectiveness and efficiency in government and, if they become disheartened and despair of being themselves able to make their government efficient, they turn in hopeless helplessness to some dictator to do it for them.

"This of course is reaction of the crudest kind and means that the long ascent must be begun all over again under different and even more difficult conditions. The fundamental contest in organized civilization is between liberty and compulsion. Despotism, socialism, fascism, communism and the rest are only different names for compulsion—whether social, economic or political—in some one of its many different forms.

"The contest is on. The world's peace, the world's prosperity and the very continuance of our civilization are at stake.

"The greatest aid and invitation to compulsion is that which arises from the misuse or the abuse of liberty. It is the man or the group that abuses liberty in order to trample upon and to oppress their fellows that invites compulsion as a remedy.

Question Before Mankind

"The most searching question before mankind then is: Can man be moral? Can he put human service above self-seeking, or must he be held in place and made to do so by a force which is essentially non-moral and in highest degree compulsory? That is the question which today cries aloud for answer in Europe, in the Americas, in Asia and in Africa.

"Today the hope of mankind rests in the democracies of the Western Hemisphere, whether their form be monarchical or republican. Their strengthening and welfare is vital, as is that of an organized family of nations, not in order that the status quo—social, economic or political—may at all hazards be maintained, but, rather in order to guide and to direct the development of the status quo toward higher, wiser and therefore better aims in a spirit of international understanding, international cooperation and international peace."

Pope Bespeaks Aid While 'Life Lasts'

Pope Pius XI, creating two new Cardinals, at Vatican City spoke thoughtfully on June 15 of his duties, "as long as life lasts."

At a secret consistory he elevated two friends, Mgrs. Giovanni Mercati and Eugenio Tisserant, says the New York Times.

Then speaking to twenty-seven assembled Cardinals, he said:

"We invite the Catholic faithful to pray that the Lord permit us, as long as life lasts, to spend it in unceasing, fruitful work for the divine glory and good of souls."

(The Pope, now entering his eightieth year, has been reported in somewhat delicate health.)

The Pontiff also spoke of his satisfaction with the lay activities of the Catholic Action groups, "in the face of an increase in the church's enemies."

Medieval color and ritual marked the secret consistory. The Pope walked to the hall flanked by Swiss and Noble Guards and seated himself on his throne, while the papal master of ceremonies called out:

"Extra omnes!" (every one out).

Then the doors were locked on the Pope and his Cardinals, with the Swiss Guards in brilliant uniforms on sentry duty outside.

The Pope used an ancient formula in naming the new Cardinals, both of them his close associates for years and both now on duty in the Vatican library. He asked:

"Quid vis vivitur?"

In ancient times that was a signal for the Cardinals to speak up with dissenting opinions, if they held any, but custom now holds them to solemn acceptance. Silently, they raised their red hats in approval of the new Cardinals, who will receive their own birettas at a public consistory Wednesday evening.

The Pope also made formal proclamation of three American and two Canadian bishops.

They were Mgr. George L. Leech, to be bishop of Harrisburg, Pa.; Mgr. Hugh L. Lamb, auxiliary bishop of Philadelphia; Mgr. William Adrian, bishop of Nashville Tenn.; Mgr. Francis Carrol, Calgary, Alberta, and Mgr. Patrick Bray, St. John, N. B.

Among the Cardinals in attendance was Cardinal Dougherty of Philadelphia. In an interview in the Osservatore Romano, the Vatican newspaper, today Cardinal Dougherty described three-fourths of the motion picture output as "an instrument of corruption."

Austrians Suspect Nazi Plan To Rule

Fear Chancellor, In Admitting Germans To Cabinet, Brings In A 'Trojan Horse'

Rumors persist that the Austrian Government is negotiating for the cooperation of the so-called emphatic nationalists. Even the arrival of the former Italian Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs, Fulvio Suvich, with his wife, for a sojourn at Semmering outside Vienna, was immediately linked with these rumors, says a Vienna despatch to the New York Times on June 15. The report continues:

Speaking yesterday in Vienna to a gathering of Catholic peasantry, Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg said:

"We shall not stray one inch off Dollfuss's road. (He referred to the late Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss.) We are ready to talk with our opponents as long as there is no question of swerving from our fundamental principles."

Nazi Warning Is Seen

Some observers view Saturday's renewal of Nazi agitation—even on a small scale—as a warning.

The ban on German papers in Austria has been extended three months. The regulation compelling Austrian tourists to obtain special permission to travel in certain countries was canceled today, except for Germany.

The official Viennese press pointed out today that after Switzerland and Denmark a third neighbor of Germany, Czechoslovakia, had given up the patronage of German tourists because the Reichsbank was both unwilling and unable to furnish the requisite foreign exchange. Under these conditions, the newspapers say, the German ban on Austrian tourists, established three years ago as a reprisal, has become a mere gesture.

The clerical organ, the Reichspost, today complains of misrepresentation of Austrian internal affairs in the German press and asks whether the Austro-German "press truce," negotiated by the German Minister Franz von Papen still exists. The Reichspost threatens to reveal to the Austrian public "the real situation in the Catholic Church in Germany."

All this tends to show that Chancellor Schuschnigg's efforts to broaden the basis of his regime by winning over the moderate Nationalists is meeting with suspicion and even hostility from those of his adherents who are convinced that the giving of portfolios to Germans has brought "a Trojan horse" into the Clerical-Fascist camp.

Fund Set Up for Hapsburgs

In connection with the establishment of a family fund of $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 for the support of the Hapsburg Archdukes and Archduchesses, it is officially announced that Francis Salavator, Joseph Ferdinand and Henry Ferdinand will be excluded from benefits, since in 1919 they renounced their rights as members of the former imperial family in order to remain in Austria when all the others were banned by the republican law.

This ban, however, has been tacitly ignored in several instances since the wane of republicanism heralded by the advent of a Heimwehr regime in 1928. Francis Salvator was the late Emperor Franc's Joseph's favorite son-in-law, and Joseph Ferdinand commanded an Austrian army in the World War.

The establishment of a family fund is one result of the abrogation of the Hapsburg law confiscating the former dynasty's property. The property already returned has been placed in this fund, which is administered by the Archduke Otto as the present Hapsburg family head. A great part of the assets, however, consists of castles and other real estate, so actual annual income has not been fixed yet.

Austrian official circles stress that the creation of this fund means only the restoration of "unjustly" confiscated property and has nothing to do with the dynasty's restoration.

Stamps 'Peddled' To Aid Conscience Fund By $3.84

The conscience of "Restitution," of East Aurora, N. Y., should be resting easier as a claim of $3.84 in favor of the government was settled.

"Restitution" sent to the Treasury $3.84 in 3-cent stamps in payment of income-tax delinquencies recently. The Department head, recipient of the letter, took the stamps to the Postoffice, where he was advised cash refunds were not made. Thereupon, he "peddled" the stamps to his office personnel, and deposited the proceeds in the nebulous Conscience fund, says the New York Times.

At the same time, $70 was received from Philadelphia, addressed to "Hon. Morgenthau" for deposit in the Conscience Fund.

No Progress

"Beer? Certainly not. Didn't I tell you a month ago that you must not touch liquor of any kind?"

"Yes, but I thought that perhaps medical science had made further progress since then."

Russians Print 10,000 Papers

"worker-correspondents," that is to say, men, women and children who write letters and articles for newspapers. Editors select from this voluminous correspondence the material which most strongly reinforces state policy

As an example the Kremlin decided last autumn to concentrate its attention upon the Stakhanoff movement, designed to speed up and increase the efficiency of industrial and agricultural production. The press enlisted its "worker-correspondents" in popularizing this campaign. Each newspaper published thousands of letters from "Stakhanovists," describing how they had successfully applied new methods, how they were teaching others. Hundreds of letters accused directors and foremen of obstructing the movement. Others complained that workers were threatening and "beating up" Stakhanovists. But the press published no letters from the numerous sincere opponents of the movement. The newspapers reported that "the people" were waging successful warfare against "enemies of Stakhanovism and Communism."

Democracy

With the approaching promulgation of a new Soviet constitution, the Communists announce that they intend to expand the work of the press. "Our new constitution will be the most democratic in the world," declares Pravda, "and will permit Soviet democracy to blossom to an unpredictable extent. The press must assume the largest degree of responsibility for applying the new constitution, for inculcating in every citizen a warm and holy feeling of Soviet patriotism."

But Communist writers add that the new constitution does not provide for "bourgeois so-called freedom of the press." They explain that "there is no freedom of the press in bourgeois society and never will be." One writer adds that "the only honest press in bourgeois countries is that which struggles against capitalism, the press of the working class." He does not explain how such a press can exist if there is no freedom of the press.

In Soviet Russia, declare the Communists, there is no need for that "bourgeois fetish," freedom of the press. For Russia has created a "class-less society," and so-called freedom of the press in other countries is merely freedom to express the clash of class interests, which no longer exist in Russia.

British See France In State Of Revolt With Fascism Near

Anxiety Is Due To Fear Blum Will Not Act Swiftly Or Emphatically Enough

The great Socialist experiment in France and the conditions which have hastened its headlong inauguration are being watched in London with anxious eyes, for what Premier Leon Blum is doing there is fast becoming vital to a larger area than is comprised in the French Republic. It may, and probably will, affect the whole of European democracy, says Frederick T. Birchall in the New York Times. His article of June 13 from London continues:

What is going on in France from the British viewpoint is little short of revolution—bloodless revolution thus far, it is true, but no less decisive than the revolutions of 1830, 1848 and 1871 and to that extent crucial, not only for France, but for the whole of Europe, which even now is beginning to stir under its repercussions.

If Premier Blum can succeed in pulling France out of her economic difficulties and restoring confidence in the honesty of French politics it is felt here that this may be the turning point in the struggle of democracy against dictatorship. What he has to do is to be as bold as a dictator in facing unpleasant facts and adroit and persuasive enough to meet them with the existing democratic machinery.

Specifically, as London sees it, he must sooner or later devalue the franc, but unless he does this soon the strikes now sweeping through the country will wipe out any benefits of devaluation. The consequences in social unrest none can now foresee, but fascism and dictatorship seem to be ever nearer.

Kerensky Precedent Cited

The anxiety that is felt is due to the fear Mr. Blum will not act swiftly or emphatically enough. His efforts then might end in a violent and brutal reactionary movement that would shake democracy in France and elsewhere.

The precedent of the well-meaning Kerensky is all too recent not to be remembered here. The fear is that Mr. Blum may prove to be a second Kerensky, breaking the trail for the malevolent forces of fascism if not of communism.

Especially it is feared here that part of the reaction which may supervene in France may well be an outbreak of anti-Semitism, which has been latent there since the Dreyfus case. Unprejudiced observers who have come from Paris this week think they already see a groundswell of such an anti-Semitic movement in the vicious attacks of the Right against the new Premier—the first Jewish Premier in French history.

Should he fail, the attacks will grow in violence and they will inevitably involve more than a single personality. Hence the fervent wish here that somehow there may be hidden somewhere in Mr. Blum's somewhat incomprehensible economic policy the magic of success.

There is still another source of anxiety, little discussed yet present always in the international situation in which France is so important a factor. A disunited, internally discordant France will weaken the ties between the free countries upon whose united strength alone hangs the prospect of a future free and peaceful Europe. If the prospect is not soon to become even more menacing than it is now, France must speedily find herself and be strong.

In this connection there is a curious story unpublished but widely circulated in influential quarters which, if true, provides serious food for thought.

There was a meeting in London recently of the War Graves Commission in which the old leaders of the wartime armies, who are now caring for the cemeteries in which are buried the dead of the last war, exchanged views as to their maintenance and preservation. Fabian Ware, an Englishman, presided and one of the German delegates was General Hans von Seeckt, creator of the Reichswehr in the days of the republic and under Hitlerism confidential adviser of the German General Staff in bringing into existence the new German Army.

At one of these meetings, according to the story, General von Seeckt was said to have made what evidently was intended to be a comradely and complimentary speech. He said, in effect, that another war was inevitable and that he only hoped that its survivors would be able to meet afterward in the same fraternal and harmonious spirit that "we survivors of the last war are demonstrating here."

G-Men Epitomizing US Anti-Crime Wave

kidnappers cross state lines, that let in the G-men directly.

Opportunities for the G-men were extended by Congress to allow them to make direct arrests. Previously when they located their man, they had to ask a local policeman or sheriff to do the arresting. In some cities they might as well have notified the criminal himself. G-men were also detailed by law against robbers of federal banks. Last year they cut such crimes in half.

Bigger Work

The chance to do bigger work swiftly brought out the exploits of the G-men which have made them famous.

As another significant factor, the United States Department of Justice has consciously sought and has practically taken the leadership of the nation in the fighting of crime. This country has something new in an anticrime drive that is national. This is evidently another phase of the centralization of power in the Federal Government. Objection is not evoked, both because of the need and because of the Government's policy of avoiding local interference. Through the Attorney General's crime conference of 1934, and other means, the department has spurred public thought.

With its G-men the Department is promoting new standards and encouraging by example. It has money, authority and freedom from the interference of local politics. The G-men are high-grade, intelligent and trained. Their methods are now being circulated to local and state police forces through the Bureau of Investigation's training schools at Washington. These schools are inviting a small number of picked police from over the country.

Finger Prints

In gathering records of finger prints, the Identification Division of the Bureau is receiving the cooperation of more than 9000 contributing police departments, has on file more than 5,500,000 finger prints, and gives a five-minute service on identifications. Teamwork with local communities is also multiplying through the uniform crime statistics service of the bureau. Monthly reports on crime are being sent to Washington by nearly 3000 communities.

These routine services of the bureau are elevating police work through the country and occasionally giving the G-men themselves a useful clue.

Part of the G-men's success is credited to the better support they receive from federal courts and prosecutors. Local police, after getting their man, are sometimes euchred into futility by the interference of politics.

All of the Federal Government's catching of criminals might fail of fully winning the public eye and confidence if its methods of getting the news to the public were dull. And the G-men have a chief who knows publicity as well as crime detection. In a great public campaign the publicity is indispensable.

People Must Know

If the crime crusaders must have the people backing them up, the people must know. Getting the public to know is an art and has its technique the same as tracking down kidnappers. J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, understands how to get the story of his G-men to the public. Crime experts count this talent of Hoover's one of the unmistakable causes of the G-men's popularity.

The press, the movies, the magazines have been ready. Six years ago would have been too early. The G-men began their big career just when the world was willing to hear.

Pershing Appeals For Preparedness toward the citizen-soldier, and he emphasized that the leadership of small units in combat is highly important "in these days of mechanized armaments and concrete defenses."

"Leaders are needed," he continued, "in every calling and profession. Courageous leadership is the one thing that can guarantee the success of a democracy. Its very existence depends upon the leadership of the men selected to conduct its affairs.

Appeals for True Leadership

"Such men should actuelly lead the people in thought and guide them in forming their judgments instead of catering to their every whim in order to remain in office. Only under the leadership of men who hold patriotism above personal interests can the ideals of the fathers be maintained."

And then the future:

"Each generation of Americans has been put to the test of war and each has proved its devotion to country. Amid these surroundings laden with traditions that hark back to the beginnings of America I m constrained to caution you that the situation in the world today is far from reassuring.

"No one can tell when we shall again need our armies, and no one can foresee the effect upon us of another world catastrophe. I am certain that it is only by maintaining a strong nation that we can be in a position to use effective influence in international affairs.

"Good citizens cannot shut their eyes to the possibility of wars and while making the most earnest efforts to preserve peace in the world, they owe it to all that is sacred to make ample preparation against an evil day * * *"

The general finished and the long line of 276 graduates commenced to file past the rostrum to receive their diplomas of Bachelors of Science and graduates of West Point and their commissions as second lieutenants in the regular army and to grasp the hand of Cadet Captain Pershing of 1886.

Applause For the Graduates

There was clapping and applause as Cadet Oliver Garfield Haywood Jr. of New Jersey, honor man of the class, stepped forward; there was more with a "Yea, Bill," from the corps when Cadet William Reeves Shuler took his diploma. Benjamin Oliver Davis Jr. of Washington, Negro cadet, son of Colonel and Mrs. B. O. Davis, on duty at the Tuskegee Institute in Alabama, won prolonged applause from the corps and spectators. He was the fourth Negro in the history of the academy to be graduated from West Point.

William Childs Westmoreland, first captain of the corps, also received loud applause as he stepped to the rostrum, with his trim 25-foot maroon sash—one of the badges of cadet officer rank—wound in precise folds about his waist.

Mothers, fathers and sweethearts watched with rapt faces and proud but tearful eyes as West Point sent another class into the world. But not until William Arthur Joyce, last in his class, earned a long and friendly handclasp from General Pershing did the spectators and the corps burst the bonds of restraint and send forth a shout across the plains. For 1936 had graduated.

There remained the singing of "Alma Mater" by the corps, the administration of the familiar old oath of allegiance to the new officers by Colonel W. M. Connor, Professor of Law at the academy, whose son was among the graduates and the benediction by the Rev. G. G. Murdock.

Immediately after the ceremonies, the three lower classes fell in and, forming on the parade ground, heard the announcement of appointments of cadet officers for the coming year. Then the new second class rushed for trains and Summer furlough; the new yearlings prepared for Summer camp and the new first-classmen packed up preparatory to starting a Summer round of training at Mitchel Field and other army stations in the East.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Armless Highwayman

It doesn't seem possible that a man without arms could pull off much of a robbery, but Will Queen of Union, S.C. did just that. Queen's arms are both amputated at the elbows, yet he held up and robbed John Palmer, of his home town, of $136. He manipulated his weapons so cleverly that Mr. Palmer took no chances. However, Queen was arrested on April 25, 1935, stood trial and was convicted, serving eight months in jail for his crime.

Recognition

About twenty or thirty midshipmen were spending an afternoon, when some bad hombre came thundering in, shooting pistol right and left, and said to the middies, "Every one of you dirty skunks get out of here." Everybody scampered out except one little plebe. The bad man turned to him with his pistol still smoking and said, "Well." The plebe said, "There sure were a lot of 'em."

Different

Father: "Fancy a big lad like you being afraid to sleep in the dark."

Son: "It's all very well for you, you've got mother to look after you."

One Rose Is Yearly Rent Charged For Playground

A rental of one red rose a year is provided for in a lease made by Mr. and Mrs. Daniel H. Bradley to Harold H. Beebe, a member of the Board of Education of Pitman, N.J., and past president of the Pitman Kiwanis Club, for a vacant lot which Mr. Beebe has converted into a neighborhood playground.

Mr. Beebe lives at 224 Grandview Avenue, and the neighborhood "gang" has spread beyond the confines of his own backyard, where he has a swimming pool for the youngsters, says the New York Times. His lease with the Bradleys has been duly recorded with County Clerk R. Edward Klaisz at Woodbury, and payment of the first year's rent has been acknowledged.

college community. Some such feeling moved the Rev. Andrew Crosswell in 1771, to compose a resounding rebuke to the college community, under this title:

"Brief Remarks on the Satirical Drollery at Cambridge, Last Commencement Day; with Special Reference to the Character of Stephen, the Preacher which raised such extravagant mirth."

The ragged and yellowed pages of his pamphlet, preserved in the college library, ring with righteous wrath, despite the old style S's making such apparent words as "hiffing" and "mufcles."

He praised the "eloquence, ingenuity and logical accutenefs" of a number of the candidates for degrees. But "the Comic-Buffoonery which concluded the forenoon's exercises and which made the Houfe of God to outdo the Play-Houfes for vain laughter, and clapping, gave great offence."

"The art of Buffoonery is not one of the liberal arts," he added. "It ought not, therefore to be cultivated at Cambridge; it ought to be nipped in the bud."

In the century preceding commencement troubles were of a different nature. Matters became so serious that on June 22, 1693, the corporation deciding that "for the Commencers to have Plumb-Cake, is so dishonorable to ye College, not grateful to Wise men, and chargable to ye Parents of ye Commencers: to therefore put an End to that Custom."

Whether the plum cake was steeped in Medford rum or became too dangerous a weapon of assault, it was agreed in 1726 that "ye Several Members of ye Corporation will Endeavor to think of what may be a proper method for ye preventing of such Disorders and Immoralities."

For a time commencement exercises were closed to the public in an effort to maintain order, even the date being kept secret. In those days each commencer was called on individually for examination and oratory.

Another difficulty exerted an influence in the agitation for a new college at New Haven. In 1655 students balked at a new regulation for a four-year course for their B. A., and they refused to pay the commencement fee of £3 or to accept their degree. Only two out of the seventeen in the class were graduated and of thirty-nine in the next three classes only twenty-two were graduated.

Thus President Chauncy lost about £90 in fees and the disturbance led to reopening the subject of another college. But Yale was not born until the turn of the next century.

President for a Few Hours

One more oddity was the presidency of Urian Oakes, who served only a few hours of one day in 1672, just along enough to conduct the commencement exercises. President Chauncy had died that year and so had the senior fellow.

When the successor, Leonard Hoar, for some reason refused to take office in time to preside, Mr. Oakes consented to serve. In a witty speech he compared himself to Caninius the consul who entered and left office on one and the same day, and of whom Cicero said:

"He was a man of marvelous vigilance, since he slept not during his entire consulate."

Mr. Oakes said he never took noonday naps and would try not to go to sleep during the exercises, so that perhaps he might equal the fame of Caninius.

Through the years the date of commencement has wandered over the calendar from May to September and possibly October.

It was about 1689 that commencement began to take on the popular and festive character that accompanies it today. Graduates and their families returned for the occasion, enlivened by booths and peddlers.

Between the bachelors' exercises in the morning and the masters' in the afternoon a banquet was served, ending when the Governor started the loving cup on its rounds.

In 1701 Lieut. Gov. William Stoughton on his deathbed ordered his ceremonial cup given to the college. It is massive, beautifully turned and chased, and double-handled.

With the increasing size of the university the commencement ceremonies have necessarily changed somewhat, but the spirit is unchanged and there are many souvenirs of the picturesque early years, surviving through the longest history of commencements in America

Toscanini In Paris Marks 50 Years As Conductor

Arturo Toscanini and his friends celebrated with him the completion of fifty years of musical triumph on June 15 when the Italian maestro conducted a concert in Paris commemorating his debut as an orchestra leader at the performance of "Aida" in Rio de Janeiro on June 15, 1886. Toscanini was then 19 years old.

After his performance that night, says the New York Times the great conductor recalled to intimate friends who thronged about him many anecdotes of his long career.

fessed "executing" Poole in the brutal slaying which disclosed the existence of the terrorists and touched off a series of fast moving investigations.

The three charged with the conspiracy against Voisine, whose home was bombed shortly before Dean said the gunmen were sent after him last Autumn, had previously been arraigned with twelve others on charges of kidnapping and murdering Poole. They are "Colonel" Harvey Davis, Ervin D. Lee and John Bannerman.

"Fascist Plot" Is Hinted

Some of the twelve accused of the plot against Kingsley had been charged with arson as members of a Black Legion "torch squad" which burned the home and barn of William Mollenhauer in Oakland County two years ago.

Besides the fifteen arraigned today, fifteen are held for trial in the slaying of Poole. Other charges include flogging, arson, intimidation and abduction.

Four are also in jail at Jackson awaiting trial for abduction and assault in a bogging case, and a fifth man there is charged with assault in an attempt to force a minister to take the oath of the secret society.

Many of the men have confessed, declaring in almost every case that they were forced to join the terrorists and were kept in the organization by threats of drastic reprisals if they attempted to leave.

Vague stories of a plot to establish a Fascist dictatorship with 6,000,000 armed men taking part in a coup, of plans for political dominance through terrorism and of schemes to obtain preference for Black Legion members in industrial employment, have come from some of the prisoners, but the stories remain unverified.

"The men are beginning to talk, however," Mr. McCrea said today, "and we won't stop until we bring the whole business into the light of day."

Pastor, 69, Shot in Cabin, Dies

WEST CHESTER, Pa., June 13—The Rev. Paris B. Stauffer, 69 years old, died today of a gunshot wound inflicted Wednesday night by a youthful assailant at the pastor's isolated cabin at Darlans, near Downington. Mr. Stauffer, a retired Lutheran pastor, had told police that he returned to his home after an absence and found the young man inside, holding a small rifle owned by the minister. "This is a hold-up, put up your hands," the youth ordered. The pastor thought it was a joke. As he stepped forward the weapon was fired.

Sleepless For 2½ Years, Offers $100,000 For Cure

An Indian millionaire who asserts he has had only twenty minutes' natural sleep in the past two and one-half years recently offered $50,000 for temporary relief and $100,000 for a permanent cure.

He is Rai Habadur Ramijidas Bajoria, a Marwari merchant, says the New York Times. He expressed the belief that an American physician might cure his illness, but fatalistically added:

"It is too late for help to arrive. I will soon experience the blessedness of eternal sleep."

The merchant has rejected thousands of suggested cures because they conflict with his religion. He has also refused to submit to experimental treatments

Active Reds In Bavaria Now Face Life In Camp

Lifelong detention in concentration camps of "incorrigible enemies of the State" was threatened on June 15 by Minister of the Interior Adolf Wagner in a speech at Ebersberg, Bavaria.

He told the audience: "The Munich Gestapo (secret agents) recently cleared out a nest of Communists. They turned out to be old offenders who had been set free in the belief they would not transgress again.

"But now I am determined that enemies caught a second time shall never be let out of concentration camps. They will have to remain there for the rest of their lives."

Anglo-Egyptian Talks Progressing Smoothly

LONDON, July 7—Despite the fact that several weighty problems, mainly the questions of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and the status of foreign residents in Egypt, have not yet been settled, official circles here confirmed that the Anglo-Egyptian negotiations now going on in Cairo are progressing satisfactorily.

The same circles added that future Anglo-Egyptian accords will be based on acceptance by Britain of a gradual withdrawal of British troops from Cairo and their reconcentration in the Suez Canal area.

The Egyptian authorities, it is understood, will speed up construction of new roads in order to enable British troops to move swiftly from one point to another in Egyptian territory. Furthermore, it is understood that a new air base will be created in the canal area in order to strengthen British defenses.

Official circles, moreover, voiced the opinion that the new Anglo-Egyptian accords will strengthen the British position through a realization of closer British-Egyptian military cooperation.

KARUIZAWA CELEBRATION

The 50th anniversary of Karuizawa as a summer resort will be celebrated Saturday, August 8. An international pageant is being planned for that morning and a tennis exhibition for the afternoon. A tea will be held at the Karuizawa hotel and a dinner at the Mampei hotel. The K.S.R.A. is sponsoring the celebration.

NEW K.S.R.A. CLUB HOUSE

The new K.S.R.A. club house will be completed and fully equipped within the next few days. It is a two-story structure located between the two sets of tennis courts. It has dressing rooms complete with lockers for both men and women and a spacious room where refreshments are served, on the first floor. The upper story has two rooms, the larger being a club room.

KARUIZAWA TENNIS COURTS OPEN

The tennis courts at Karuizawa were officially opened Saturday. The K.S.R.A. plans to make the tournament this year an open affair instead of restricting it to Karuizawa residents only. The grandstand has been improved since last year.

ROOF GARDEN MOVIES

The motion picture program at the Imperial hotel roof garden this evening will be "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" with Norma Shearer, Charles Laughton, Fredric March and Maureen O'Sullivan and "Duke For a Day," a comedy; and "Hollywood Premiere," a technicolor comedy.

Canada Gets Proposal To Cut Its Bureaucracy

Premier Would Reduce 16 Ministries To 13, With Savings In Their Staffs

Inherited Scottish thrift and his pre-election promise actuate Premier Mackenzie King's move to check mounting governmental costs and bureaucratic expansion by merging and modernizing departments.

For greater economy and efficiency, he is asking Parliament to indorse proposed consolidations of the Departments of Mines, Interior, Immigration and Colonization and Indian Affairs into a single department to be known as Mines, Resources and Colonization; and consolidation of the Departments of Railways and Canals and Marine and the civil aviation branch of the Department of National Defense into the Department of Transport.

Staffs will be reorganized, single purchasing offices established, legal services merged, records unified and stenographic services pooled, says D. M. Halliday in the New York Herald Tribune. His despatch from Toronto of June 13, continues: In the new Transport Department there will be a single deputy minister where formerly there were two.

18 Branches to Be 8

Doing the interrelated work of the Mines, Interior Immigration and Colonization and Indian Affairs Departments—now consisting of eighteen branches which would be be cut to eight—are three deputy ministers, one deputy superintendent general, four legal advisers, two editorial staffs, three publicity staffs, four translation staffs, two architects' offices, four sets of stenographic and other staffs, purchasing agents, doctors, map-makers and surveyors. They occupy twenty-four buildings in Ottawa, of which more than half are privately owned with a yearly rental of more than $215,000. Premier King hopes to house the consolidated staffs in one building, thus cutting overhead and expenses of interdepartmental communications at the same time as the rent bill is reduced.

When the western provinces got control of their natural resources, the Interior Department lost its usefulness, and unemployment ties the hands of immigration and colonization officials, it is said. Years ago the Interior staff administered crown lands, forests and water power, all of which are now provincial affairs; colonization, once of great importance federally, has now become increasingly a matter of internal distribution of population.

It looks to Future

In selecting a title for the department, the government has sought to look to the future more than to the past. Emphasis is given to mining; the term "resources" indicates all that the government is doing to administer crown lands, forests, water power, parks, geodetic survey; while the third name in the title, according to Premier King, "gives emphasis to a greater national development permitting us to pay more attention to the movement of people within our own country than has formerly been given, sufficient attention to what will be needed when the time arrives to encourage immigration."

Recognition that highway and air transportation have assumed a growing importance as an integral part of the older rail and canals communications system of the country, and also as competitors, is given in the creation of the new Transport Department. Canada's lack of organized air lines has become almost notorious, even though commercial transport by air, particularly in the western provinces and in the north, has scored big gains.

Benefits and advantages not to be measured in dollars and cents include uniform direction of all matters of transportation within the Federal ambit. One ministry will be able to consider transportation interests as a whole, rather than as individual services with rival and possibly conflicting interests, jurisdiction and regulation, or lack of regulation.

When former Premier Richard B. Bennett was retired by the electorate, the Cabinet consisted of twenty-one Ministers, seventeen of whom were holding portfolios and four of whom were not paid. There are now sixteen Liberal Ministers, fifteen of whom hold portfolios. Mr. King's proposed consolidations reduce the total Cabinet membership to thirteen, with accompanying reductions in staffs without any predictable loss in efficiency.

Business Fears Costs As Blum Keeps Word

Deputies are accepting almost without murmur the radical bills that Blum puts before them; and unauthorized processions of workers, carrying the Red flag aloft in triumph, parade the Champs Elysees and the most elegant boulevards of Paris, while the Croix de Feu and other Fascist leagues are lying low and biding their time, waiting for the inevitable turn of the tide. For, and this is a point that must not be forgotten, the bold reforms introduced by Blum will cost money.

The Employers' Association, after swallowing the strike settlement, issued a statement asserting that the wage increases imposed a heavy burden on the employers and on French economy, and that the forty-hour week would mean further aggravation of these burdens.

Holds Government Responsible

Lambert Ribot, secretary of the Comite des Forges, declared that the employers were under no illusions about the consequences of the experiment which had been imposed on them. He said that the owners had no alternative but to accept arbitration of the government, which would have to assume responsibility for the new situation.

"Le Temps" estimated that labor reforms would increase the costs of production about 35 per cent. In addition to the wage increase averaging 11 per cent, the forty-hour week in equivalent, according to this responsible newspaper, to a 20 per cent rise in wages, while the paid holidays mean another 4 per cent increase. Can France, with its overvalued franc, continue to remain on the gold standard and yet stand the strain of these increased costs of production?

Paul Reynaud, the foremost champion of devaluation, says no. M. Reynaud, who is one of the clearest thinkers in French political life, only a little while ago was a voice crying in the wilderness when he advocated devaluation; but today there are so many converts to his views that he complains his wilderness is now overcrowded.

In the most thoughtful opposition speech yet delivered in the new Chamber, M. Reynaud warned the government that if Premier Blum carried out his program without adjusting the currency he would only speed the march toward disaster. France had already more than 12,000,000,000 francs of inflation, he said, and the figure would be doubled before the end of the year. He found that the government program involving increased production costs with overvalued currency meant closed factories and spreading poverty. Would not the government accept devaluation? Reynaud asked.

Blum's answer was a flat negative. The Socialist Premier is banking on general economic recovery stimulated by the efforts of his government to revive production by increasing the demand. He expects to obtain the money he needs for his reforms by expansion of credit, by taxing the rich and by tightening the tax administration. Time will show if Blum's recipe is successful.

Arms Monopoly For U.S. Held Feasible Move

Majority Senate Report So Finds—Minority For Strict Regulation

A government monopoly over the manufacture of munitions in the United States is both feasible and desirable, a majority of the Senate Munitions Committee recently told the Senatefi in the seventh section of the investigating committee's extensive report, says the Christian Science Monitors.

The entire committee, on the basis of its study, concluded that there should at least be strict regulation of the industry.

The report delved into such questions as relative cost of government and private manufacture of armament, the effect of a federal monopoly on prices and profits in wartime as well as in peacetime, the possibility of effective regulation, and the effect of a monopoly upon the readiness of the nation to produce munitions in event of war.

Saving in Navy Yards

For every $12,000,000 spent on cruisers in private yards the Government could save approximately $2,000,000 by construction of the same cruisers in navy yards, the committee found. By transferring cruiser construction to the navy yards, the nation would get one additional cruiser free for every six built, it was said.

Studying comparative costs between public and private manufacture of ammunition, the committee said that the Government could save $18,600,000 on a $100,000,000 order for shells and cartridges if they were made in its own arsenals instead of under contract with private manufacturers.

Depends on Defense Policy

It was pointed out that the feasibility of government manufacture of arms depends to a considerable extent on the nation's future policy of national defense. The committee took the stand, in the absence of an official statement of national policy, that under few, it any, imaginable circumstances would the United States need supplies for an army larger than 1,000,000 men.

The majority favoring government manufacture was comprised of Senators Gerald P. Nye (R), North Dakota, committee chairman; Bennett C. Clark (D) of Missouri; James P. Pope (D) of Idaho, and Homer T. Bone (D) of Washington. The minority, advocating "rigid and conclusive munitions control," was composed of Senators Walter F. George (D) of Georgia; Arthur H. Vandenberfi (R) of Michigan, and W. Warren Barbour (R) of New Jersey.

These three senators felt that if government plants were built, political pressure would keep them at full capacity, thus increasing production of war supplies instead production of war supplies instead of encouraging disarmament.

Private Profits Uncontrolled

Among the finding that led the full committee to advocate drastic changes in the present system of arming the nation were the following:

That munitions makers generally and legally make use of national emergencies to obtain high profits.

That failure of the Navy Department to turn its navy yards into effective yardsticks by which the charge of private shipyards could be measured and kept down, has resulted in leaving profits of shipbuilders practically uncontrolled.

That the navy has been used by shipbuilders as a lobby for their interests.

That wartime experience shows there is little hope of enforcing profit limitations.

Survey of Plant Capacity

Armaments which the majority would have the Government manufacture include warships, gun forgings, projectiles and armor plate, powder, rifles, pistols and machine guns. They expressed the belief that the War and Navy Departments can produce from their own ranks or employ sufficient table technicians to operate these plants successfully.

Included in the committee's report is a thorough survey, made with the co-operation of the military service, of the munitions needs of the nation, the capacity of plants already owned, and the cost of acquiring the additional plants that would be needed.

Leith-Ross Issues Statement On China

to such ventures, confidence must be reestablished by abrogating any measures that have the effect of discriminating against foreign capital, and, as regards real estate, by securing that the legal rights of mortgages are fully protected. Foreign capital cannot be expected to assist China unless it is assured of fair treatment.

I fully agree with the observations of the American Economic Mission, viz., "A vast change is coming over China: a modernization that, as compared with ten or even five years ago, marks many centuries." I believe that this change will make China not a less but a more fruitful field for British enterprise—commercial, industrial and financial. Our principal interest here is to promote the peace, the prosperity and the trade of China, and in working for this, it seems to me we are working in the interests of all countries trading with China. The reconstruction of China is a vast task which will take years to accomplish, and there is room for all to assist her in this task. The present Chinese Government have, despite conditions of peculiar difficulty, made remarkable progress in the restoration of law and order, the resettlement of the devastated regions, and the development of communications. Their recent currency reform was, in my opinion, planned on sound lines, and it is in the interests of everyone that it should succeed.

In conclusion I should like to express, on behalf of my colleagues and myself to the Chinese Government and their officials and to the Chinese and foreign bankers and traders whom we have met, our warm thanks for the assistance and hospitality extended to us wherever we went.

Turkey Wanted British Alliance

Sir Edward Grey, However, Rejected It Before World War

Turkey, whose action in coming into the World War on the side of Germany, caused no little trouble to Great Britain, as the campaigns in Gallipoli and Mesopotamia bear witness, had only the previous year pressed Britain to enter into a defensive alliance with her. Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary, would have none of it, for reasons revealed in the latest volume of British documents on the origin of the war, just made public, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

The volume (Vol. X, Part 1) is the bulkiest yet issued. It deals with the complicated interplay of politics in the Near and Middle East in the years 1898-1914. It shows Germany striving for influence in Turkey to the great suspicion of Russia, with Britain looking on watchfully and working to preserve peace, while Austria was playing her hand in the Balkans.

Repercussions Feared

Turkey was still at war with Italy when the proposal first came to Britain for an alliance, so the time was obviously inopportune. When it was renewed later, Sir Edward Grey rather feared, for one thing, the repercussions it would have on the other European Powers and, for another, he distrusted the Turkish Government.

"We alone can certainly not put Turkey on her feet," he wrote in a minute, "She would, when her fears subsided, resist efforts at reform and play off one power against another unless all were united."

German in Command

Russian consternation reached its height when it was announced that Liman von Sanders of Germany was to superintend the reorganization of the Turkish army and command the first Turkish army corps at Constantinople.

Sir Edward Grey wrote to the British Ambassador that it would place the whole corps diplomatic at Constantinople in German power, and the key of the Straits would practically be in German hands.

He refused, however, to take action as strongly as Russia desired. For one thing he was a little suspicious of Sergius Dmitrievich Sazonoff, the Russian Foreign Minister. It is clear in fact from various references in the volume that Mr. Sazonoff was regarded as a somewhat "shifty" individual. Sir Edward Grey confessed, however, that it had caused him more trouble than all other affairs on hand put together.

Rival Ambitions

There is also told the little-known story of the last attempt to introduce reforms in the Armenian provinces of Asia Minor. The Turkish Government invited the British Government to supply experts, but Russia promptly claimed a share in the work, and eventually two Inspector-Generals were selected from the minor powers in April, 1914. The reform machinery had not had time to begin to work when the World War broke out.

Then there was the problem of the rival ambitions of Turkey, Greece and Italy in the Aegean Islands and the Dodecanese. This also was still unsolved when the war began.

Grey's Comment

It is of some interest to read that Sir Edward Grey in June, 1914, wrote: "I do not know what Greek or Turkish war plans may be, but the closing of the Straits to merchant vessels for any length of time will be intolerable. I think H. M. Government would have to contemplate measures if necessary to enable Turkey to keep the Straits open to merchant vessels without risk of being attacked through the Straits by Greece."

The story is told of the conflict between British and Russian interests in Persia, which at one time wore the British-Russian entente very thin indeed, and of the famous Russo-German rapprochement inaugurated by the visit of the Emperor Nicholas to Potsdam in November, 1910—a meeting which put all the chancelleries of Europe in a blaze of activity.

King George Interested

Russia withdrew her objections at this meeting to the Bagdad railway and discussed plans for a future Persian railway under Russian auspices.

The late King George V showed his interest in this matter by two notes which his private secretary, Lord Knollys, wrote to the Foreign Secretary. The first note stated that the King considered it important that a certain point in Mr. Sazonoff's draft agreement should be in writing to prevent misunderstanding in the future. The second expressed approval of an alteration making the matter clear.

The Austro-Hungarian ultimatum to Serbia in October, 1913, demanding the withdrawal of Serbian troops from the newly-created state of Albania was a kind of rehearsal of the quarrel which led to the World War in the following year.

Thomas Ridicules New Lemke Party

Socialist Voices Doubt That It Will Play Important Role In Campaign

Norman Thomas, Socialist nominee for President of the United States, expressed doubt on June 20 that the new "Union party of the United States" will play an importnat role in the campaign.

Mr. Thomas, at Lake Mahopac, N. Y., to address the annual conference of the League for Industrial Democracy, said that the platform of the party expressed "some noble aspirations" but "vaguely promises the impossible," according to the New York Times. The article of June 20 continues:

"I am still skeptical that the Union ticket will prove a serious threat," he declared. "At this late date it will not be easy to get on the baliot. The only chance of success is a kind of triumvirate of Coughlin, Townsend and Smith, and historically triumvirates have usually fought among themselves.

"Two and a half rival messiahs plus one ambitious politician plus a platform which reminds me of the early effort of Hitler to be radical do not make a very strong party.

"Does Lemke expect to get the money from Coughlin or Townsend or are some of Landon's friends willing to take a chance on him drawing a certain discontented vote from Roosevelt?

"The platform is significant as a revelation of justified discontent and it voices some noble aspirations. It vaguely promises the impossible.

"Its planks for farmers are all for the benefit of land-owning farmers who will get the government to take their mortgages while they still grind the tenants down or exploit them as unmercifully as the planters exploit the sharecroppers in the cotton country, especially now in Arkansas.

"What Lemke, as Father Coughlin's agent promises, is to give us plenty of profit for little business men and for farmers without government interference, but with the government, stripped of bureaucracy strong enough to produce money out of a hat, to curb monopoly and to guarantee in some miraculous way a nice living wage for workers in farms and factories who will be employed by the little profit-makers instead of the big.

"That's a good deal the way the Fascists began to talk in Italy and Germany. Even they did not believe that. Even the Fascists have learned from German and French experience that, while monetary inflation may destroy the middle class, it merely builds another and, while it lasts, its soaring prices make life even harder for the worker."

In an address to the conference Mr. Thomas recommended the imposition of workers' sanctions when wars threaten.

"We do not want the United States committed blindly," he said, "to a policy of collective security through sanctions, which is more likely to lead to war than to keep peace.

"By workers' sanctions we mean strikes against mobilization; a refusal to ship arms, for instance, to Germany or Japan in the event of an attack on Russia."

His Foreign Relations Plank

Discussing in his speech the new Union party plank on foreign relations, he said:

"Apparently Mr. Lemke belongs to the company of those Americans who believe we can sell to the world, but not buy from it; that we can have a big army and navy and as surely keep it home; that under any kind of capitalist government we can get as rigid conscription of wealth as we can get of men, or that conscription of men will be palatable if only we can conscript wealth.

"I believe in keeping America out of war, but the job cannot be done in terms of such ill-thought-out isolatism as the Lemke platform implies."

Belief that bellicose nations of the future may forego formal declarations of war and revert to primitive methods of invading enemy territory without warning was expressed by Robert Woolbert, a foreign affairs expert.

He cited the Italian advance into Ethiopia and Japan's movement of troops into Manchoukuo.

President Roosevelt, he said, took this realistic attitude when he declared a state of war existed at the start of the Italo-Ethiopian conflict and brought about an application of the neutrality legislation.

This legislation, he added, had obvious defects, but it was a good beginning.

"Do we want to be neutral?" he asked. "Would we be neutral in America if Canada or Mexico were invaded? Or what would you do should the masses rise in Europe against the dictatorship?"

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Last King Of Ireland

Lambert Simnel (1475-1525), the son of a baker, was crowned as Edward VI, King of Ireland on May 24, 1487, at Christ Cathedral Church in Dublin, in the presence of the Lord Deputy, the nobility and all the officers of State. Coins were struck bearing his likeness, a proclamation was issued in his name and a series of laws were enacted on the new royal authority. Simnel led an army of 6,000 Irish and 2,000 Germans against King Henry VII of England. The English and the Irish armies met on the battlefield of Stoke on June 16, 1487 when the Irish were defeated and their King captured. Henry did not execute his Irish antagonist. He placed the erstwhile King in the humiliating post of a baker's helper and dishwasher in the royal kitchen, thus committing him to obscurity and oblivion.

Rust Says Nazism Precedes Science

Minister Of Education Tells The Heidelberg Gathering Of The New 'Weltanschauung

The main event of the third day's ceremonies honoring the 550th anniversary of the foundation of the University of Heidelberg (June 29) was an address by Dr. Bernhard Rust, Minister of Science, Education and People's Education.

The Minister warmly defended National Socialist ideas about science and undertook to prove they did not interfere with "true objectivity," at the same time asserting supremacy of the Nazi "Weltanschauung" and declaring that science which is not in accord with it is not objective, according to the New York Times. He said:

"Hidden from the eyes of strangers, a change has taken place in the institutions of higher education since the Nazi party came to power. This change has resulted from the fertile influence of the new Weltanschauung (nazism) and racial realities. At first, however, these efforts of science to enrich itself from the stream of the new Weltanschauung attracted less attention than certain political measures taken by the State, which were made necessary by the Nazi revolution."

Gives Nazi View of Science

The Minister then took up the charges that the present regime is making science the handmaiden of its political program. He continued:

"The Nazi State does not need to defend its measures. It takes them out of the fundamental right of a nation to form its own character. The charge of enmity to science is true of the National Socialist regime if the complete absence of preconceptions and predispositions, unrestrained objectivity, are to be taken as characteristics of science.

"We dispute such an idea of science, however. All great scientific systems have been supported by faith in the meaning of the universe and the fate of human beings. In setting ourselves free from the false idea of objectivity we achieve at the same time a concept of true objectivity as a characteristic of all knowledge.

"We refer here to our fundamental starting point in preconception."

In familiar philosophical terms the Minister appeared to be arguing for the deductive rather than the inductive scientific method, with the Nazi concepts of race, blood and the like in the position of ultimate and indispensible principles.

Referring to professors of the political and social sciences, the Minister stated:

"We do not demand of the scholar that he praise the creations of the Nazi State. Nor do we regard it as his duty to give political actions his consecration afterward. We reject decreed science, but we also refuse to tolerate a political professor.

"It is thereby clear that National Socialism does not attack true scientific objectivity as we have defined it, but rather sees in it a prime necessity of its independent existence.

"Old Idea Gone Forever"

"The old idea of science based on the sovereign right of abstract intellectual activity has gone forever. The new science is entirely different from the idea of knowledge that found its value in an unchecked effort to reach the truth.

"The true freedom of science is to be an organ of a nation's living strength and of its historic fate and to present this in obedience to the law of truth."

The first academic procession on the program took place this morning. All the visiting professors participated. Dean Lindsey Blayney of Carleton College, Minnesota, spoke on behalf of American universities in the public assembly that followed in the Town Hall. He expressed gratitude for all that the United States owes to Heidelberg.

The government announced an anniversary gift of 300,000 marks to the university to aid in the construction of a new women's clinic.

Students who are still corps members were allowed to wear caps and colors as a special privilege in the torchlight procession that night. For a moment the old town regained something of its once world-renowned atmosphere of romance and poesy, but the spell was soon broken as the streets again filled with student Storm Troopers and uniformed party functionaries.

Hindenburg Lands After Many Hours Waiting

Rearming Rush Of Britain Told By Chamberlain

true extent of German rearmament.

Denies Attack on Baldwin

Londonderry disavowed any intention of making a personl attack on the head of the government.

"Every piece of information it was possible to give Mr. Baldwin was imparted to him," he said, "and on a recent visit to Germany I found all the information I was capable of giving the Prime Minister to have been correct."

Herbert Morrison, Labor leader, at a Labor demonstration at Colchester, sarcastically remarked that the government was in such a sorry state that "if things were not so serious it would be almost funny."

"One would be tempted to ask Cochran (C. B. Cochran, theatrical producer) to make a revue out of it," he added.

U.S.S.R. Stresses Aid For Children

Physical And Cultural Help For The Young Emphasized As School Year Ends

The beginning of Summer holidays and the end of the scholastic year made June 29 in Moscow the occasion of a big press and public ballyhoo about children.

Both Pravda and Izvestia carried on their front pages glowing editorials with the identical title "Happy Children" and one-third of Pravda's front page was devoted to a picture of Joseph Stalin greeting a little "Pioneer" girl, who carried a bouquet of flowers, according to Walter Duranty in the New York Times. His report of June 29 from Moscow continues: The same picture was widely displayed in stores, street cars and the subway.

While this is part of the current campaign for the re-establishment of family life and improved facilities for the care and education of children—as exemplified in the new law forbidding abortions and quadrupling the budget for children's homes and creches—no impartial observer can deny that the "child question" now comes first in Soviet calculations.

Interest in Children Paramount

This no doubt is partly because the problems of national defense and the socialization of industry and agriculture, which formerly took precedence, have received satisfactory solutions. It is no exaggeration to say that "everything" is being done for children nowadays.

In Moscow alone there were opened today a new central "House of Pioneers" and twenty-six special children's parks and playgrounds, in addition to those already existing, like the Park of Culture and Rest, all of which have children's sections with special amusements. This movement is not confined to Moscow and urban centers, but is generally spreading throughout the country—every collective farm now organizes children's play and instruction centers.

In the course of this week upward of 15,000,000 young persons from the kindergarten age to 20 will go to camps, rest houses and homes in the country or at seasides.

From the American viewpoint the current slogan, that "all" the organizations of the Communist party, government, labor unions and agriculture must cooperate in organizing intelligent and joyous holidays for children, may appear to savor of regimentation. The Soviet children's camps that the writer has visited seem, indeed, considerably regimented, leaving little opportunity for individual tastes or pastimes.

But that does not enter Soviet consideration—in fact, quite the reverse. To begin with, this country is not animated by the "pioneer spirit" in the American sense of that phrase, which is the foundation of American individualism.

Among the Czarist Russian masses individualism was rare and taboo as a sign of independence that might lead to revolt. Secondly, Soviet authorities are deliberately doing their utmost to promulgate the collective spirit and joint action—that is one of the essential features of the Socialist system—and the children undoubtedly enjoy it and profit from it.

In the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics today there are approximately 10,000,000 members of physical-cultural organizations between the ages of 18 and 30, without mentioning innumerable younger children now being taught to play games and take rational exercise What this means in a country where the masses had virtually no games or physical training outside the army must be seen to be realized.

Appearance Shows Change

It has already visibly affected the appearance of young persons between 12 and 20. Fifteen years ago the writer noticed plenty of good-looking, healthy children, but after 15 the girls looked sloppy and the boys lumpy and loafish until military service set them up.

Today the youths of both sexes are clean-cut, upstanding and vastly superior in carriage and appearance to their elders. They wear simpler clothes and carry themselves with a healthy swing.

Last but not least there is a corresponding improvement in what is known as "morality" as the Russian youths learn that sports and dissipation of any kind are incompatible. In this connection it is significant that the new law against abortions has found the warmest support among university students and the Communist Youth organization.

The Orphan Bridge

Des Moines has quite an impressive looking bridge spanning the ravine at Salt Water Park, standing alone and useless. It just spans the ravine. The bridge, built of reinforced concrete at a cost of more than $53,000, is F.P.W.A. Project No. 4145—going from nowhere to nowhere, and inaccessible both to foot and vehicular traffic for the lack of approaches to both ends of the bridge.

Sydney Plans Fight Against Invading Sand

New South Wales Moves To Protect Broken Hill District

The New South Wales Government recently appointed an expert committee to study and report on the problem of soil erosion, caused by wind storms, in the western division of the state, and the committee has already produced many interesting facts. It will almost certainly urge the Government to take early measures to save the remaining standing timber in the west. Particular attention will be given to saving that friend of western stockmen, the mulga, small tree on which sheep and cattle are fed during dry periods.

The saving of all this western area and the stemming of the steady advance of sand eastward depend on preservation of every growing thing that binds the friable soil, says the Christian Science Monitor. A 200-mile tour through the country around Broken Hill, near the South Australian border, revealed an alarming situation, with a possibility of even more serious developments within the next few years.

Man is making a desert there. Over hundreds of thousands of acres the mulga has been destroyed and everywhere it is dying out. Following its destruction comes the sand, slowly but certainly. Already large tracts have been abandoned and many properties are carrying nothing but mortgages.

Miles of Petrified Forest

How difficult it is for this country to recover from severe treatment even when the timber has not been totally destroyed was indicated during the committee's tour of investigation. The party passed through miles of seemingly petrified forest. Twelve years ago the mulga trees were lopped to feed cattle. The trees died.

It was point out to the committee that the absence of winter rains, which had protected grazing lands in the past, had been responsible for much damage. Summer rains did not protect the country enough. It was claimed that many small holdings were overstocked and feed had been dug out of the ground left bare of mulga and saltbush. Sand, which swept in huge dust-storms, sometimes a mile high, settled in drifts, choking any feed that might have survived.

These storms originate far out to the west of Broken Hill—right out in the desert interior of the continent. Members of the committee collected samples of the sand to attempt to find out exactly from what area the material was picked up by the winds. The present season has been comparatively free of severe storms, but in previous years they were of frequent occurrence, and it is considered that they are getting much fiercer and more destructive.

Lack of Vegetation Blamed

This is ascribed to the clearing of vegetation. Such clearing not only removes the anchoring structures of the soil, but also allows the wind great access to gather its load of sediment. This factor is responsible for the erosion troubles throughout the western division.

Authorities agree that it is the low rainfall that is at the root of all the troubles of the West. With a copious supply the area would become very fertile.

Residents of Broken Hill, a city where silver and lead mining holds sway, have become alarmed by the sand-drift problem. Situated right in the heart of the friable plain country and in the path of the strong dust-carrying winds, sand accumulation in the city is doing much damage and causing great annoyance.

The main difficulties are experienced in the outlying parts of the west and south of the city. The strong prevailing winds from inland are depositing there such loads of red dust that many homes have been abandoned.

At South Broken Hill, homes have been overwhelmed by the dust, or, as it is termed locally, "drowned out."

'Timothy's Quest' At The Hibiya Is Children's Film

the little sister, and Virginia Weidler, seven-year-old, plays a "meanie" role as Samantha, impish tattle-tale. Young Bennie Bartlett has a brief bit.

Elizabeth Patterson, as the sour spinster aunt, makes her difficult role ring true. J. M. Kerrigan and Irene Franklin as the mercenary child traders charge the picture with menace.

Old as well as young will like "Timothy's Quest."

Hauptmann Estate Valued Under $1,000

The will of Bruno Richard Hauptmann was filed on June 22 in the Surrogate's Court in the Bronx, New York City. The estate, according to the petition for probate, amounts to less than $1,000, all of which was left to Mrs. Anna Hauptmann.

Drafted on Jan. 13, 1933, the will was filed by Frank B. Mescke, New York attorney, says the New York Times.

"I direct my executrix, or executor, hereinafter named, to pay all my just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses as soon after my decease as may be practicable," the will read and added:

"All the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, both real and personal, of whatsoever kind, nature and description, wheresoever same may be situate, I give, devise and bequeath unto my beloved wife, Anna Hauptmann, to be hers absolutely and forever."

The will directed that in the case of "prior or simultaneous death of my beloved wife" one-half of the estate should go to his mother, Pauline Hauptmann, and the other half to be divided, equally between his father-in-law, Friedrich Schoeffler, and his mother-in-law, Katharina Schoeffler. In the event of his mother's death her share was to go to Hauptmann's brother, Fritz Hauptmann, and his sister, Emma Glockner, in equal shares.

and Karl leave the school.

But there is always a contest to save the day in German pictures and this one is no exception. On the day of the contest, Karl challenges Frahms to a race. After it is started, Frahms spots Christine's glider flying beneath his machine. Realizing that her machine is in a dangerous position, he quits the race to save her.

Christine now realizes that Frahms truly loves her and that his motive in trying to send Karl home was not a result of professional jealousy. The film ends with everybody happy for Frahms wins the girl and Karl the race and the 5,000 mark prize.

Stuart Hibberd Is Britain's Best-Known Voice; Made Radio Debut In '24

Britain's best-known voice is taking a holiday in Canada and the United States. But before sailing from England recently, Chief Radio Announcer Stuart Hibberd — owner of the voice—was heard by British listeners in a novel role, talking about himslf.

Since making his first radio announcement in 1924 Mr. Hibberd has broadcast about 50,000 hours, says the Christian Science Monitor. His voice is heard most nights in most British homes. It was surely high time Mr. Hibbered told a few things about himself.

Announcing, reading news bulletins and intrdoucing artists is not boring even after 50,000 hours of it, Mr. Hibberd said. No two nights are alike and each night is a first night for all practical purposes. These past. And Mr. Hibberd is an enthusiast like the words of an enthusiast. He believes the most important qualification for an announcer is a keeness for his job. Other qualifications, he says, are quickness in dealing with difficult situations, knowledge of languages and experience of people and the world.

The only time he seems to have been bored was reading birthday greetings to 500 children.

They Do Make Mistakes

Talking of slips, he admitted how instead of 51 feet. But this slip was he described a whale as 512 feet long capped by Mr. W. N. Shewen, chief Empire announcer, who described in the same program how he told millions of listeners that a concert was coming from the "Bathroom at eRump," instead of the "Pump Room at Bath."

This feature which introduced Mr. Hibberd and others more intimately to their listeners was the 100th of a series called "In Town Tonight." It has proved very popular in giving a cross section of life in Britain by bringing to the microphone trmps, sweeps, engine drivers, nyvies and people in every conceivable walk of life. There have been many unusual "professions" represented and many unfamiliar dialects.

Responsible for this feature has been Mr. A. W. Hanson. He told listeners of 1000 different charcters he had discovered for these programs. Some insist on dressing up for the part. A woman chimney-sweep arrived with her face covered with soot. A veteran tub-thumper or street-corner orator who came to broadcst could neither read nor write and Mr. Hanson told how various articles were placed in front of him at the microphone to remind him of what he had to talk about.

A Deception

Mr. Hibberd pleads guilty to deceiving the public once—but only once. He revealed how one Sunday night only the preacher arrival for the studio service without the choir.

Mr. Hibberd juggled with wavelengths, preacher and gramophone disks and apparently nobody spotted the difference.

Although Mr. Hibberd is going on vacation he is looking forward to studying American radio technique from close quarters. He plans to return from Canada via New York and the Queen Mary. Before leaving here he had no definite arrangements for speaking over the air in North America, but it seems likely he may find an opportunity to say "How-de do" in what is widely regarded as the best speaking voice in Britain.

Parliament Ends Ottawa Session

Speech From The Throne Lists Canadian-American Treaty Among Major Achievements

The Canadian Parliament adjourned on June 23, two days later than scheduled, but on the birthday of the new British King. The frayed tempers which had blwon to white haet an eleventh-hour debate on R. B. Bennett and several government Ministers were forgotten as the legislators rose to conclude their proceedings with a lusty singing of "God Save the King," in honor of a monarch who is better known in Canada than any of his predecessors.

Promoinently mentioned in the speech from the throne recording the session's achievements was the Canadian-American trade treaty, says the New York Times, whose Ottawa despatch of June 23 continues:

"The pronounced increase of our trade during recent months," it was also noted, "is evidence of the beneficial effects of the government's fiscal policies."

Aside from the treaty and an agreement settling a trade dispute with Japan, the most notable achievements of this Parliament have been the acquirement by the government of a majority of stock in the Bank of Canada, the appointment of a board of directors, more immediately responsible to Parliament than the former trustees, to administer the Canadian National Railways and the creation of a broadcasting corporation on British lines to replace the frmer Radio Commission.

It was the first seession of a Canadian Parliament in which a fourth party was represented. This was the Social Credit party. In all but three of its eleven divisions the conservative opposition voted with the liberal government against the Social Credit and Commonwealth Cooperative Federation (Cooperative Federation (Socialist) parties.

Members of Prime Minister Mackenzie King's Cabinet will go to Europe to further his policy of enlarging Canada's trade with the world.

Finance Minister Charles Dunning will go to London to negotiate a renewal of the Anglo-Canadian treaty made during the Ottawa conference of 1932 and of Canada's treaties with the other Dominions.

Trade Minister W. D. Euler will visit Germany and Russia to seek wider export markets there. Canada has maintained an embargo on Russian goods for the last five years, but is ready to drop it.

Prime Minister King himself will go to Geneva in September as head meeting of the Assembly then when of the Canadian delegation to the reorganization of the League of Nations will be discussed and will also attend the coronation of King Edward and the subsequent imperial conference next May.

Set New Precision In Atomic Weights

ing an atomic weight of seven and the other an atomic weight of six. The lighter type, which is the rarer of the two, constituted only about 7 to 8 per cent of the total mixture, yet somehow the neutron projectiles entered exclusively into the hearts of the atoms of the lithium six, leaving the lithium seven atoms completely unharmed.

Combination Is Split Up

The hearts of the atoms of lithium six are composed of three protons and three neutrons. The Cornell physicists shot an extra neutron into the combination, which at once split up into two parts, one part consisting of one proton and two neutrons, namely, hydrogen of mass three; the other consisting of the balance of two protons and two neutrons, namely, helium of atomic weight four.

Now in this process of creating two elements where only one natural element existed before, an enormous amount of atomic energy is liberated, as was illustrated above by the example of breaking up one alpha particle into two deuterons. By determining the amount of this energy liberated it is also possible, through Einstein's famous formula for the equivalence of mass and energy, to determine the relative masses of the elements in question.

With their "scale for the intangible" the Cornell physicists weighed more accurately than ever before the difference between the proton and the neutron. The proton, they found, has an atomic weight of 1.00773, whereas the neutron has at atomic weight of 1.00849, a difference of 0.00071 of a unit on the atomic scale.

Ionization Chamber Used

This means that the "net for the immaterial" registers differences in weight of one one-hundred-thousandth of the weight of a proton. The weight of the proton in grams is one-millionth of a millionth of a millionth of a millionth of a gram, or one divided by one followed by twenty-four zeros.

The new method employs a movable ionization chamber, in which moving atoms are made to register their "footprints." The ionization chamber can be moved to different distances, and these distances can be measured very accurately to one one-hundredth of a millimeter. By moving the chamber the range of the hydrogen three atoms and of the helium atoms, created from the debris of the lithium six, can be measured with great accuracy, it was reported, and by measuring the range the energy with which the atmos travel is determined, just as the distance traveled by a bullet gives the energy with which it was fired.

The range of the hydrogen three atom was found in this manner to be 5.73 centimeters and was found to possess an energy of 2,670,000 volts, while the helium possessed an energy of 2,000,000 volts, a total of liberated atomic energy of 4,670,000 volts.

A theory offering an explanation to the puzzle as to why some substances are conductors of electricity while others are not, was presented at a symposium on "some problems in applied physics" by Dr. Frederick Seitz, Assistant Professor of Physics at the University of Rochester.

According to the theory of Professor Seitz, based on the application of the laws of the new quantum theory, the difference is explained on the grounds of the difference in the energy states existing in the various substances. There is only a certain number of energy states possible, Dr. Seitz explained. If all the energy states are filled there is no room left for the free electrons to move around in. In such cases no electrical conductivity is possible, he reported.

Communist Party In France Claims Many Adherents Body Has 181,205 Adults And 65,000 Junior Members, Says Report

Domei

PARIS, July 12—Following speeches in which the fact that many new adherents have been received into the French Communist Party since the outbreak of the strikes throughout the country on May 26, bringing the total number of members up to 181,205, and 65,000 members of the youth organization, the present congress of the French Communist Party came to a close yesterday.

"We extend our hands to Catholic workers and to former members of the Croix de Feu (dissolved Rightist paramilitary League) . . ," declared M. Maurice Thorez, Secretary-General of the Party, in the final speech of the session.

Continuing he underlined that Communists were the indefatigable champions of the national union of manual and intellectual workers, of the workers of the city and of the fields.

"It is neither London, Berlin, nor Moscow, despite the admiration that we profess for the Bolsheviks and the great Stalin, that will decide the destiny of France," he went on. "One must look instead to the Paris of the revolution of 1789, and to the Commune of 1871. We will make France free, strong, and happy."

Fraternal delegates from England, Italy, Germany and Holland addressed the conference, and declared that the growing importance of the French Communist Party was the hope of all Communists in other countries.

"The French people," declared one of these, "has constituted, thanks to Communism, the Front Populaire. This example will soon be followed in other countries."

A delegate of the Renault automobile factory claimed that more than 2,000 workers of the factory had joined the Communist Party since the outbreak of the strike moment.

While various speakers cited numbers showing the growth of the Party in their districts, exceptions were noted in the Departments of "Aveyron," "Manche," "Hautes-Pyrenees," "Sarthe," and "Ardennes." These weak spots would soon disappear, it was stated.

Mme. Roux, delegate from "La Manche," declared that it was necessary to attract Catholic women to Communism. "It is for us to realize," she said, "the Christian ideal of 'love thy brother.'"

M. Aftal-ah, Algerian delegate, declared that Algerian Communists were fighting imperialism and the exploiting landed proprietors.

Lemke Criticizes Both Democrats And Republicans

Pledges 'New Day' With No 'Stacked Cards'; AAA Held 'Farcical'

Larruping President Roosevelt, Governor Landon, and more especially Secretary Wallace, Representative Lemke of North Dakota on June 28 at Burlington, Iowa, promised 5,000 perspiring Southeastern Iowans a "new day," not a "new deal with stacked cards," if he should be elected President.

The speech, sponsored by the National Union for Social Justice, was the first of the third-party candidate's campaign tour, says a Burlington despatch to the New York Times. The report of June 28 continues:. It was delivered under the trees of Crapo Park, in the heart of one of the Midwest's richest farming areas.

He was proud of Iowa for past greatness, Mr. Lemke declared, but he qualified his praise thus:

"I'm not so proud of the last two individuals you sent to high political office—Herbert Hoover, who lived so long in England he forgot what true Americanism is, and Henry Wallace, who has a complex that prompts him to teach birth control to American pigs so he can arrange imports from foreign countries."

Urges a Central Bank

He centered his fire mostly on the New Deal, but charged that the Republican party "is the same thing, only a little smarter about concealing its faults."

Mr. Lemke outlined the Union party's three major planks, currency, agriculture and security.

He stressed the term "international bankers," a favorite of the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, and declared that the Roosevelt administration "may have led the money changers gently from the temple, but it wasn't long before they were back in their choir."

"Inflation is just a parrot-like term used by idiots who don't know what it means," he said.

"The real inflation is carried on by the Federal Reserve Bank, with its notes that go to international bankers in return for nothing and backed by nothing but hot air."

The Union party would create, through a bill similar to the Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage refinancing measure, a central bank to control all currency and retire all of the tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds now in circulation, he said, adding:

"Money is nothing more than a yardstick to measure wealth. Henry Wallace didn't know how to use the yardstick, so he asked you farmers to cut the piggies' throats; then you wouldn't have any use for the yardstick."

Both Parties "the Same"

Mr. Wallace had taken a dollar from the pockets of the farmer "for every dime he put through the Triple A," Mr. Lemke charged.

The "Triple A" had become the "crippled A" through the Supreme Court, which was wise enough, he said, to see through the administration's "farcical" scheme to help the international automobile manufacturers and bankers by increasing foreign imports in an attempt to save their foreign investments.

"Both parties were and are the same," he said. "Now I'm giving you a choice. And I'd like nothing better than to help you make that choice by appearing in a public debate against both Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Landon, if they can find time to get away from their fishing trips and horseback rides."

If elected he would wipe out the "brain trust," fight for more labor-saving machinery and distribution of the benefits to all the people.

Although nominal support has been promised him from the Townsend pension organization, Mr. Lemke merely generalized on this subject, declaring for compensation for those who have worked most of their lives.

He offered no specific farm program, limiting himself to criticism of present trends.

Of relief he said that the administration program was a monumental farce and that, in spite of the tremendous "payroll," the election would not be won by the dole.

In his attack on Secretary Wallace, Mr. Lemke recalled the publicity picture taken of Mr. Wallace in the South, in which he was plowing under a row of cotton, driving a mule that at the time was standing determinedly still. Lemke declared that "the donkey proved itself the better statesman by refusing to pull the plow."

"The only overproduction we are suffering from is an overproduction of ignorance in Washington," he continued. "We no longer have a representative government. We have laws written by a brainless trust and steamrollered through a bunch of 'representatives of the people' who don't know as much about the issues as do the page boys in Congress."

Quoting the Roosevelt statement that "even Presidents make mistakes sometimes," Mr. Lemke wondered if the biggest mistake hadn't been made by the voters on election day.

American citizens will not sell their votes for sandwiches, he said.

Mr. Lemke praised the late Senator Long, saying that the Louisiananan's assassination was a national calamity. More men of Long's type will be placed in government offices, he declared.

The candidate was introduced by Dr. J. F. Walsh, a chiropractor, president of District 1 of the National Union for Social Justice.

He was preceded by the Rev. C. E. Riddington, local Social Justice leader, who belittled Governor Landon's "rubber platform" and declared that the old parties of Jefferson and Lincoln were "dead and should be buried."

Blinkety Blink

Margot Grahame ruined several scenes in a movie yesterday just because she couldn't keep her eyes open and it wasn't that she was sleepy.

Now filming in the Columbia picture, "Counterfeit," with Chester Morris, Marian Marsh, Lloyd Nolan and others, Miss Grahame was making a scene in which she was required to fire a revolver.

It was a new experience for the actress and it developed that every time she pulled the trigger, she closed her eyes tightly in anticipation of the sound of the explosion.

Elsie Janis Giving Her Life To Charity

co-director until I left the stage in 1929, has been trying to horn in and swerve me from the peace I have sought. I finally turned on him and said: 'Listen, I know all about your set-up and just what you can give. The only really inspired happiness I have ever had was when I was giving without any thought of you—in the war and after.'"

The accident to which she refers was an automobile crash in which she and her husband, Gilbert Wilson, were involved.

"I am giving up everything I have, boss, except the talent, personality, pep, or whatever it was that put me in the money as Little Elsie, and kept me there for thirty years.

"Anyway, I want to be a rookie again, and as any army guy knows, the less you carry on a march the better. The dear old manor, which has been dear in every sense of the word, is the first thing I'm giving up—and I never loved it more. I had left it, in one of those cockeyed wills folks leave, to the State."

The letter filled more than two columns, jumping at times from subject to subject but returning always to the main theme: that she hoped to help herself by aiding others, as she had attempted to do in the past.

Unfortunately, she said, she could not give the house away because "at time of going to press I have everything but money."

"That is just old Mammon being sore at me," she explained.

"However, I am going to sell it for just enough to pay for what I owe, which, thank goodness, is not much, comparatively, and is owed not for fine feathers but for fine folks like doctors, coal dealers, even lawyers (a hangover from the Mammon days when I had income tax worries), and a couple of good friends who didn't know where I was going when I refused to step back for half rate and try to stage a comeback in the money."

After explaining that she intended to take care of her servants before entering upon her new life, Miss Janis told how she would dispose of her possession.

"This morning, boss, I received my Community Chest notification, and was sneering at its puniness when I got a snappy order. It said: 'The end of Summer will see an auction down here on the lawn of all my so-called important souvenirs and valuable nicknacks.' The Tarrytowers will be invited to buy for the benefit of the Tarrytown charities, all of them, all of them. I shall be the auctioneer, and I promise good gages about my souvenirs.

"Incidentally, for all old Mammon could wave at me, I would not sell the manor to a private owner. These great old trees have sheltered selfishness long enough."

At her home tonight Miss Janis would not enlarge on her plans as divulged in the letter. She refused to see interviewers and in answer to a note wrote:

"I have said everything that is in my heart in that letter. It was for Tarrytown and not for publicity. Every word is true since I wrote it and have no reason now to tell anything else. Thanks for the interest but I'm saying no more."

Roosevelt's Failure On Budget Criticized

millions):

	Revenues
1932	$2,006
1933	2,080
1934	3,116
1935	3,800
1936	4,116

Clearly the problem of the budget is no longer concentrated on the revenue side. The revenues that flowed into the Treasury's coffers for the fiscal year ended last Wednesday actually exceeded those collected in 1929! And yet the gap between income and outgo was as much as $4,763,000,000.

Much of this huge sum is, of course, represented by the prepayment of the veterans' bonus. This obscures the real budgetary situation because most of it was the due in any case to be added to the national debt in 1945. The item accounted for $1,700,000,000. It will not appear in the budget again.

The recurring items which stick out among the national expenditures were enumerated last night by Secretary Morgenthau. Most of them ocuild be subjected to the pruning knife.

If, with the advent of recovery in national income, the emergency agencies were wound up, a sizable sum no doubt would flow back into the Treasury. Unemployment relief even more urgently stands in need of new treatment. A good deal is to be said for the return of the responsibility to the states with a pro-rata grant by the Federal Government. Work relief, moreover, should be replaced by direct relief. Only by some such program can there be amy approach to the paring of emergency expenditures as promised in the January, 1934 budget speech.

Two Schools of Thought

Two schools of thought have been in constant collision over the Federal Government's fiscal behavior since 1930:

1. Those who insist that a government should behave like an individual and square its current outgo with its current income, limiting its borrowing to anticipation of revenue. They are the rigid budget balancers.

2. Those who think of government as an entity apart from an individual in that it exists for service during the kind of emergency through which the country has passed. They are the elastic budget balancers, holding that the budget should be balanced over periods more nearly related to the business cycle than to a year of 12 months.

Lewis W. Douglas is the most notable exponent of the first school of thought. He selects a year of 12 months as the balancing period because of the need of imposing restraint upon fiscal irresponsibility. For the second school, to which the present writer has subscribed, the case for an elastic budget was put by Ogden L. Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report presented to Congress, Dec. 3, 1932. Mr. Mills said:

In a period of deep depression, with the income of the people greatly reduced, with their buying power drastically curtailed, and with millions deprived of their earning capacity, it is not only unwise but impossible to bridge the gap in the budget entirely by increased taxation.

Deficits Held Unavoidable

Incidentally, the history of Treasury finances provides the evidence for the statement of Mr. Mills that deficits cannot be avoided during depression. In American history they have been a recurring phenomenon. But, till Mr. Roosevelt entered the Presidency with his deliberate unbalancing policy, deficits have been endured by the head of the state, e.g., Mr. Hoover, only under protest.

In behalf of the second school of though, Mr. Mills is cited from the practical side of affairs, though he is reputed to be one of the profoundest students of the theory as well as practice of fiscal policy in the United States. On the purely theoretical side stands Prof E. R. A. Seligman, perhaps the greatest authority on taxation in the United States. He says:

While a budget is annual, a budgetary balance is not necessarily restricted to a single year. The requirements of a balanced budget are substantially met if there is equilibrium after not too protracted period.

Rigid Control Demanded

The second school of budgetary thought, however, insists upon the maintenance of rigid control while the budget remains unbalanced. Planless unbalance means chaos and breeds inflation. That there has been no plan is indicated by contrasting the President's speech on Jan. 4, 1934 and Secretary Morgenthau's radio speech yesterday. The end of the sixth year last Wednesday, according to plan, should have witnessed some effort to wind up the unbalancing, and now there should have been a conscious effort directed toward the reduction of the public debt. Not a word as to this came from Mr. Morganthau last night.

The fault cannot be laid wholly at the White House door. Under the American system fiscal control is not focused in the Executive. In Congress is lodged an appropriating power which few other legislatures possess. We have witnessed the results since the country was launched upon deficit financing. Legislators, over the strong veto of the President, elected to prepay the face value of the veterans' bonus certificates, thereby making a present to the veterans of the difference between the present values of those certificates and their face value.

Congress Shares Blame

A year ago the effort to reduce the loans on cotton caused a riot in Congress. Two months ago, the President unavailingly tried to reduce the expenditure on the CCC. It is these events much more than the actual total of the public debt that should cause perturbation. For, as Prof. S. H. Slichter, quoted by Prof. R. M. Haig, in the current Yale Review, says:

Deficit financing assumes that it is politically possible for the Government to take off emergency expenditures as business improves. This presupposes effective administrative and political controls on public spending. The United States is noteworthy, however for the absence of such controls. Certainly the experience of the last several years suggests that we are far from being ready politically for the policy of deficit financing.

The lack of any planned effort to restore equilibrium in the national accounts has given rise to two questions:

1. Can the Federal Government restore a balance in the budget?

2. Does the Administration want to do so?

Pressure Groups

The first question is raised by the alarming rise of a swarm of pressure groups. The new wards of state will resist any attempt to reduce emergency expenditures. A. A. Berle Jr., says that the motto of government should be: "Enough for your need but not a nickel for your pressure." Such a motto would restore the waning confidence of those who feel that the Federal government cannot control an unbalanced budget. A government with millions to spend becomes the target of special interests. And these are the enemies of that common interest which the fiscal policy of the government should serve and serve alone.

The second question has been raised because of the philosophy of over-all regulation of the country's economic activity which is so close to Mr. Roosevelt's heart. The Treasury and its emergency offshoots have become the vehicle of such regulation as a result of its deficit financing. Below are a few of the results:

1. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation not only has become the biggest bank in the world, but also has become the largest stockholder of other American banks, being the chief preferred stockholder in approximately 6000 banks, or about two fifths of the total number of incorporated institutions.

2. The borrower has swallowed the lender to such an extent that 40 per cent of the banks' deposits are now covered with bonds, most of them government bonds. Such a situation obviously ties up the solvency of the banking system with the credit standing of the Federal Government.

Control of Market

3. The Federal Government's control of its own borrowing market is also helped by two other developments:

(a) The Federal Government controls the rate of interest on the money it borrows because it controls the money supply. Since the "price" of money, like the price of any commodity responds to the law of supply and demand, the Government's action becomes decisive in the selling of its bonds, which, being bought by the banks, are credited to the country's bank deposits, and thus add to money supplies.

(b) The Federal Government controls the borrowing market for its own bonds by market operations with the proceeds of the Stabilization Fund. Thereby it can "make" the market for new bond issues.

All these powers constitute the nucleus of that overall economic control which is held by so many to be the ultimate aim of the New Deal.

Perfected to A New Standard!

WILKINSON'S TANSAN

LEMONADE

For the past two years we have been conducting numerous experiments to achieve a new standard in Lemonade, and with the critical opinions of friendly consumers both here and abroad to guide our efforts, we believe we have perfected a Lemonade embodying all the luscious aroma and full bodied flavour of the finest fruit. Yet, this matchless blend is so delicate in taste and so smooth as to afford maximum enjoyment in a thirst-quenching beverage.

Wilkinson's Lemonade is supremely healthful—the finest summer drink, especially for children—as the radio-active tonic properties so highly valued in Wilkinson Tansan are fully present in this delightful flavour, assuring absolute purity, healthful properties and supreme thirst-quenching zest.

Ernie Sutter Wins College Net Title

N.Y. Times

CHICAGO, June 28.—Ernest Sutter, 19-year-old Tulane University junior, won the national intercollegiate tennis championship at Northwestern University today with smashing straight set victory over Vernon John of Southern California, 6—4, 6—4, 6—4.

Ben Day and William Seward of Stanford defeated Norman Bickel and Norbert Burgess of Chicago, Western Conference titleholder, 6—7, 6—2, 6—3, for the doublescrown.

Brother a Former Champion

The Tulane sharpshooter won the same title his brother, Clifford, earned in 1930 and 1932, and it marked the first time in the fifty-two-year history of the tournament that two members of the same family have taken the championship.

Sutter, top seeded star and the favorite when the tourney started with a field of eighty-two last Monday, displayed a smooth, accurate game to beat his opponent, second in the ranked list. John's performance, brilliant at times, lacked steadiness and he missed several opportunities to score by erratic relapses.

In each of the three sets John rallied to pull up to 4—5 and in the second set in his fifth game deuced the score. Sutter, however, refused to crack and coolly pounded his way to victory.

Analysis of Match

The Southern star had 44 placements, to 25 for John, while in outs the count was Sutter 39, John 43. Sutter had 33 nets, to 29 for the Southern California player. The winner double-faulted twice and there were no aces. The point score was Sutter 116, John 99.

The title was Sutter's third of the year. A month ago he took the Southern invitational intercollegiate and two weeks ago the Southern championship.

Bickel and Burgess, who eliminated the defending champions, Paul Newton and Dick Bennet of California, played on even terms with Dey and Seward for the first set, then faded before the superior net game of the Westerners.

Is Handball Expert

Lloyd Nolan, featured with Chester Morris and Marian Marsh in Columbia's "Counterfeit," is one of the best handball players in the motion picture city.

Hates Daylight Hours

The finest time of the day in the opinion of Lionel Stander, Columbia contract player, is from 2 till 8 a.m. "But I never can find people in Hollywood to talk to them," he complains.

New Drought Plan In U.S. To Build Reserve Of Water

Ponds Will Be Created, Lands Terraced, Streams Dammed At $100,000,000 Cost

Destitute farmers in the drought-stricken areas of the Dakotas, Wyoming, Montana and other States in which the situation has attained grave proportions will be paid by the United States government for carrying forward work, under the direction of the Soil Conservation Service, to lessen the disastrous effects of future droughts such as that of 1934 and the present one.

These sun-baked lands, now absolutely without a moisture reserve of any kind, are to be terraced to conserve water and to prevent erosion, according to a Washington despatch to the New York Times on July 3, which continues: Small streams in the low areas will be dammed, while ponds will be created where possible, all this to build up a water reserve for use in such times as this.

The Works Progress Administration will be the principal financing agency. The cost has not been determined, but it will probably exceed $100,000,000.

While the WPA and the Soil Conservation Service are working to perfect the plan for the relief of the penniless families in the drought zones, the AAA proceeded at top speed today to put into effect the Federal livestock purchasing organization which Secretary Wallace authorized yesterday.

Feed Agency Is Created

In line with the purchasing operations, which will be directed from Washington, the Department of Agriculture announced today the creation of a Federal livestock feed agency, which will also serve as a clearing house to facilitate the rapid and efficient movement of livestock in the affected areas.

Another objective of the agency will be to locate surplus feed supplies and to keep livestock growers and farmers posted concerning the location of these supplies and the cost of them.

A similar agency operated in the drought of 1934. E. O. Pollock of the Agricultural Extension Service, who was in charge of the service in the 1934 drought, will again be in charge this year. Mr. Pollock will establish headquarters in Kansas City next Wednesday.

The service will be free to farmers, shippers, dealers, jobbers, feed supply manufacturers or other persons or organizations in the suffering regions. The agency will not buy or sell feed or make loans, which work will be handled from Washington.

The Interstate Commerce Commission today authorized three Western railroads to establish reduced freight rates for the transportation of hay and other forages to dry areas in Montana and Wyoming. The roads are the Chicago & North Western, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Colorado & Southern.

The order named Big Horn and Yellowstone Counties in Montana, and Campbell, Crook, Johnson, Sheridan and Weston Counties in Wyoming as districts in which conditions are so serious that immediate measures of relief are necessary "to avoid loss of livestock and to prevent general suffering."

Conservation Plan Modified

In order to assist farmers in adjusting their operatons to meet the emergency caused by the drought, a number of modifications have been made in the agricultural conservation program for the east central region, the Agricultural day. The East Central Region includes the States of Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, North Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia and West Virginia.

As a result of the widespread dry weather in this region these changes were designed to enable farmers to qualify under the program and still produce more of the crops needed for consumption on the farm.

European War Spells Anarchy, Baldwin Warns

Every Nation Would Rebel Against All Rulers, He Says, Pledging Peace Aid

The next European war will cause all peoples to revolt against all their rulers and resut in "complete and barbarous anarchy," Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin warned recently in a speech to 10,000 Scottish Conservatives at Wishaw, Lanarkshire.

Alluding to the war menace that hangs over Europe, says Joseph Driscoll in the New York Herald Tribune, Baldwin declared:

"If tha fire is ever lighted again on the Continent, no man can tell where the heather will stop burning, and it is not a risk that I, for one, am going to take for my country, so long as I have any control in the government.

"I believe that the perils of another modern war in Europe must lead to a revolt of all peoples against all their rulers, and you might soon find Europe in a state of complete and barbarous anarchy from end to end."

Defends Sanctions Retreat

Delivering his first public speech since the British government decided to abandon League of Nations sanctions against Italy, the Prime Minister said:

"We think it right to drop them because we do not believe that their continuance, even if all nations desired it, would serve any useful or effective purpose. Sanctions were put on to stop war. They were not devised for purely punitive purposes.

"There is only one way of altering the course of events as they have so far taken place, and that is to go to war. I do not know a single country in Europe that is prepared for that, and I am quite certain that I should not cast my vote today for that course of action."

Cites U. S. In Oil Sanction Failure

Baldwin cited the United States as responsible for the failure of the League to impose an oil embargo against Italy, asserting:

"A great deal has been said about oil. The plain reason why an oil sanction was not put in force against Italy was that enormous quantities of oil come from a country which is not a member of the League of Nations and which we have no reason to believe would prohibit exportation of oil.

"This country is the United States of America, and to put on a sanction which would be futile in its use, merely for the sake of saying that you have done it, is a form of humbug to which I will not lend myself.

"Quite a useful question to ask any one who speaks on that point is how he would have prevented oil coming from the United States to Italy and Ethiopia. It is not an easy question to answer."

Riding Habit Powder Blue

Joan Perry, Columbia player, has resumed her hobby of riding which she has had to foresake during the filming of the production "Shapedown." For these anticipated rides Jcan has purchased a habit of powder blue gabardine contrasted by a blouse of white crepe which is closed at the throat with a pin made of red leather and fashioned in the motif of a riding crop.

Joan also will wear shiny black boots and a matching felt hat.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

ALI ALI

The Tabriz mendicant of my drawing is named Ali and belongs to the most fanatical Mohammedan sect of the Shiis, who still resent the fact that Abubekr and not Ali succeeded the prophet Mohammed 12 centuries ago. The mendicant has shouted the name of his beloved Ali every waking moment of his life for nearly 30 years. No other sound, but Ali Ali has ever been uttered by this dervish during that time.

Somerset Vanquishes Worcester At Cricket

Domei

LONDON, July 13—Brilliant bowling by Wellard, who captured 10 wickets for 45 runs, enabled Somerset to defeat Worcester by 170 runs in their County Championship fixture at Yoevil.

Somerset, batting first, scored 142 runs, Jackson taking 5 wickets for 62 runs. Worcester could only reply with 60, owing to deadly bowling by Wellard who took 5 for 16.

Somerset scored 165 in their second innings, Jackson taking 5 wickets for 59 and Howorth 5 for 74, but with Wellard claiming 5 wickets for 29, Worcester could only score 77 runs in their second knock.

Hsinking Decides To Use Japanese Time

Domei

HSINKING, July 27—The hour's difference between the standard times of Manchoukuo and Japan will be eliminated on January 1, 1937, as it was authoritatively revealed today that the State Council of the Manchoukuo Government, at its meeting today, decided to adopt the same standard time standard as Japan from the beginning of next year.

It is understood that the decision will be promulgated in an Imperial ordinance to be issued on August 4 after the Manchoukuo Emperor refers the matters to the next meeting of the Privy Council.

It was stated that the Hsinking Government's decision on the matter followed a lengthy study by experts of both Manchoukuo and Japan regarding measures to unify the standard time of both countries.

NIPPON JINDO KAI ANNUAL MEETING

The annual meeting of the Nippon Jindo Kai, Japan Humane Society, was held at the home of Mrs. Inazo Nitobe, 1425 Karuizawa, at 3:30 p.m. Wednesday, July 29.

Those present were Mrs. Nitobe, Mr. and Mrs. John Struthers, Mr. and Mrs. Argall of the Kobe S.P.C.A., Miss Armstrong, noted bird lover of Toyama, Mrs. Antonin Raymond, Mrs. Taylor, Mrs. Nakashima, Miss Thompson, Mrs. Edith de Garis, Miss Yukika Ozaki, Mr. T. Yamagi, Dr. W. Watanabe, Dr. K. Yamada, Dr. K. Obara, Mr. T. Ono, Miss Sakita, and Mr. N. Kaneko, secretary of the Jindo Kai.

Mrs. Nitobe gave the opening address following which Mr. Struthers was in charge of the meeting. He called attention to three important items to be considered at Karuizawa.

The first part of his talk was devoted to means of preventing children from stealing bird nests and catching squirrels. He asked Miss Akita, the only feminine Kami-Shibai (paper theater) performer in Tokyo who has been touring the Karuizawa vicinity with her sets of Kami-Shibai, to educate children in kindness to animals and to teach them not to touch bird nests and squirrels which are an attraction for summer tourists.

Continuing, Mr. Struthers spoke of the horses which are rented to riders in Karuizawa. He said these tired and frequently sk'n-diseased rent horses are an eye-sore to Karuizawa visitors. At last year's meeting, a decision was made to suggest that the owners of the horses raise the rental fee, as the low rate was undoubtedly a cause of maltreatment of the horses. For those who are not truly interested in riding are apt to try just because the fee is but ¥1 an hour. Letters were sent to the horse owners but there were no results.

After Mr. Struthers' talk, Mr. Yamagi of the Japan Riders' Association, offered to help by interviewing the owners and attempting to persuade them to act as the Jindo Kai suggested.

In his talk, Mr. Struthers also laid special stress on the disposal of stray dogs in Karuizawa. The Jindo Kai has learned from the police that dogs are rounded up in the spring and fall every year but the Jindo Kai does not consider these round-ups to be effective enough. Stray dogs who live through the winter get wild, causing damages to farmers in the vicinity, the speaker continued.

Reviewing the work of the year, Mr. Struthers declared that the Jindo Kai has established a shelter-hospital on the station road, near the Kusatsu line, Kyudo station, where any unwanted animal can be left free of charge. The shelter is at the same time the society's hospital for cats and dogs and anyone can have their animals treated there at reduced terms. The telephone number is 74 Karuizawa. Mr. Struthers appealed to the public to use the shelter, saying that it was chiefly summer residents who leave their dogs behind when they return to their homes in the fall.

Mr. Argall gave a brief report of the Kobe S.P.C.A. activities. Mr. Yamagi asked if any woman, preferably a foreign woman, could go to a place between Numazu-Mishima-Shuzenji on August 9 to give water and carrots to horses—about 200 riders are taking a long trip along that course at that time. Anyone who wishes to help in the society's work is asked to apply to Mr. Kaneko, secretary, at 75 1 chome, Kobinata-Dai Koishikawa, Tokyo.

The meeting closed with a paper theater show by Miss Akita. Those who wish to see her sets may also apply to Mr. Kaneko.

US Does Not Threaten Canada's Institutions

stitutes more than four-fifths of the population of the Province of Quebec and a growing proportion of the population of the other provinces. Conservative, clerical and fertile, it has its own language, its own religion, its own educational system and institutions and, in Quebec, the Civil Law based upon the Code Napoleon. Descendants of the French pioneers, who, as long as three and four centuries ago, began to conquer the wilderness which was Canada, the French-Canadians are devoted to the country and particularly to Quebec.

The attitude of the French-Canadians is a decisive factor in both provincial and national politics. Forming a constantly increasing proportion of the population, because of their higher birthrate, they jealously guard their constitutional rights. They are wary of any change which might affect the relative importance of their status in Canada. Hence they oppose immigration. They also fear the influence of the United States and oppose "American penetration." Annexation to the United States would, of course, diminish the status of the French-Canadian and his Church. Hence, although emigration has given the New England states a French population almost as large as that of Quebec, French-Canadian members of the clergy and public men constantly point to the dangers inherent in America investments in Canada, and in the introduction of American institutions, habits, and 'materialistic" ways of thought. They have hindered international trade unions, with headquarters in the United States, by establishing a federation of Catholic Trade Unions in Quebec.

On the other hand, the French-Canadians value the British connection very highly. They regard it as security for the preservation of their constitutional rights, and, therefore, oppose attempts to transfer the power to amend the British North America Act, which embodies their rights, from the British Parliament to the Canadian Parliament. They fear the dominant English majority at Ottawa, but have faith in the fairness of the Parliament at Westminster. And yet they fear the influence of "British Imperialism", the "dictation" of Downing Street, which might embroil Canada in foreign wars. They are essentially nationalist and opposed to foreign entanglements—a growing feeling amongst other sections of the population.

French-Canadian Nationalism

French-Canadian nationalism has recently revived in a strong form owing to the combination of political fear and economic distress. It has given rise to a political movement which may in the near future assume the reins of office in the Province of Quebec. Within that movement there are people who look forward to the establishment of a French-Canadian Roman Catholic clerical republic on the banks of the St. Lawrence. This is not a question of practical politics at the moment but it is an indication of certain trends of thought.

In so far as Canada shares in the sentiment of the United States towards foreign entanglements, that feeling is not confined to those of the French minority. Rightly or wrongly, the Canadian outlook on foreign policy is definitely becoming North American. Although Canada is a member of the League of Nations, she has from the outset sought to define and to limit her obligations under the Covenant. She does not want to be involved in foreign wars except at her own express will. It is the strength of the isolationist sentiment which explains the recent repudiation of Canada's delegate to the League Assembly.

In association with the other member-States, Canada imposed economic and financial sanctions against Italy as the aggressor in the war with Ethiopia. But, when the Canadian representative moved that oil sanctions be also applied it dawned upon many persons that war might follow. Although any member was entitled to make such a proposal, the Government of Canada denied responsibility and asserted that its delegate acted only in his personal capacity. This action disturbed ardent advocates of the League system, but there is no doubt that when Premier Mackenzie King explained his action in the House of Commons, he expressed Canadian sentiment in asking this question: "Do honorable members think that it is Canada's role at Geneva to attempt to regulate a European war and to say what other countries are to do with respect to the manner in which a European War is to be carried on?"

Three Schools of Thought

In Canada there are now three main schools of thought on foreign policy. There are the Imperialists, who believe that every British war is Canada's war also. There are the ardent supporters of the League of Nations who believe in unlimited cooperation to maintain the League system of collective security. And, finally, there is the growing body of opinion which favors isolation from European politics.

The isolationists deny the sincerity of European efforts to enforce the collective system. They point to the ill-fated Hoare-Laval Agreement, to the politics affecting the situation in Ethiopia and in the Rhineland, and to general rearmament. They content that Great Britain in inextricably entangled in this net of politics and diplomacy, and, therefore, advise Canada to "Keep out of Europe." This is in essence the American attitude of isolation—a feeling which is rapidly gaining ground amongst even the Latin-American republics which are members of the League of Nations.

It is significant, in the light of the foregoing, that President Roosevelt has summoned a conference of the American republics in Buenos Aires in June. It is not to be held under the auspices of the Pan-American Union, of which Canada is not a member. The purpose of the conference is to discuss the maintenance of peace on the American continent. It is felt in many quarters that the result may be the creation of a League of American Nations for the preservation of peace on this continent. It is probable that, taking advantage of the growing isolationist attitude towards Europe, President Roosevelt, in his forthcoming visit to Ottawa, will seek to interest Canada in his peace movement. He will, of course, have to overcome the fear of United States domination of the movement and its possible consequences to Canada. It will be difficult for him to do so. But the fact remains that as the possible consequences of Britain's inescapable entanglements in Europe become more apparent, Canada will tend more and more to drift towards some form of North American isolation—in so far as any isolation is possible in the modern world.

Kept From Freezing By Moving Ice

A few years ago Wess Martin, foreman of the Ukiah Ice Plant in Ukiah, California, was working alone around the plant and accidentally locked himself in the ice storehouse. The lock worked only from the outside. Faced with the problem of freezing to death if he remained still, Martin started moving the heavy ice blocks and worked hard all night long, simply moving the blocks from place to place. By morning, when his men came to work, he had completely worn out all the ice in sight. A new lock was promptly installed.

Italo-Soviet Pact Believed In View

sidered here as infinitely more dangerous to the peace of Europe than any attempt by Germany against Austria. For a success in Vienna brings Berlin again to a dead end, as Italy's whole power would be thrown against her.

West-East Accord Needed

Preservation of the present conditions in the valley of the middle Danube depends, London judges, upon an agreement of the Western and Eastern groups. Italy's geographical position makes her inevitably the representative of the West, while Russia by virtue of her immense weight leads the Eastern group. This is all the more because Poland yet waits to avail herself of the advantages of her key position between Germany and Russia.

An Italo-Russian agreement, therefore, is necessary to obtain unity of action in defense of the status quo in Central Europe. Rome is linked with Vienna and Moscow with Prague, so the respective spheres of influence meet on the frontier of Czechoslovakia and Austria. Russia has a definite alliance with the Czechs promising aid against German aggression. But a move by Chancellor Hitler into Austria would represent a direct menace to the independent existence of Czechoslovakia. The result of this is that Russia shares Italy's interest in the preservation of existing conditions in Vienna.

When many Foreign Ministers were present in London some months ago on the occasion of a League of Nations meeting Nicolas Titulescu of Rumania produced a bold plan for a Russian guarantee of Austrian independence. At that time the suggestion seemed premature and Maxim Litvinoff, the Soviet Commissar, refused to commit himself. Since then, however, the idea has made progress of turning Austria into a sort of second Switzerland.

Rome Seems Not Averse

Rome does not seem to be averse to entertaining a scheme that relieves it of part of the burden of the defense of Austria against Nazi pressure. Obviously, this cannot be done without a direct Italo-Russian agreement.

During the last month when the removal of sanctions was being carefully prepared in secret diplomatic activities it was evident that relations between Italy and Russia were good and easily susceptible of further improvement. In fact Mr. Litvinoff consistently expressed sympathy with Italy's desire to see sanctions raised, and the only thing he asked for was a definition of the Italian attitude toward the problem of militarism in Germany.

Of course, in practice an open Italo-Russian agreement is hampered by Moscow's fear of Turkish jealousy. The Turks are apprehensive of anything that may strengthen the Italian position in the eastern Mediterranean. Yet this is a mere detail, especially because an Italo-Russian agreement would concern the valley of the Danube, not the Mediterranean.

British diplomacy is aware that a regional pact in Western Europe is impossible without the concurrence of Premier Mussolini. This brings in the Austrian problem, however much London may be averse to considering it. An Italo-Russian agreement would be welcome because it would diminish the chances of an upset in that part of the world.

THE CHOICE OF THE MULTITUDE

100th Birthday Of University Of London Is Feted

Thanksgiving Service Is Held In St. Paul's Cathedral

The centenary of the University of London was celebrated on July 1 with a thanksgiving service in St. Paul's Cathedral at which the sermon was preached by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and afterwards a reception and luncheon were given by the Corporation of the City of London at Guildhall, according to the London Times. In the phase of its Chancellor, the University kept high holiday in the real sense of the word. A vast congregation filled St. Paul's as there passed along its central aisle in three separate processions professors and readers of the University, the Lord Mayor of London, the Sheriffs and the Corporation, and, finally, the delegates from sister universities and from other learned bodies, the Court and Senate and the Chancellor of the University. The great variety of academic robes, both in the processions and in the congregation, made the impressive scene one of vivid color and told also of the world-wide nature of these centenary celebrations.

The Archbishop of Canterbury preached from the text "Wisdom is the breath of the power of God, and a pure influence flowing from the glory of the Almighty . . . and in all ages entering into holy souls, she maketh them friends of God, and prophets." (Wisdom, vii, 25-27.) He said that it was the strength of a high ideal and of a resolute courage that brought the University of London to birth 100 years ago. The ideal was, in the words of the first Charter, "to hold forth to all classes and denominations without any distinction whatsoever an encouragement for pursuing at regular and liberal course of education." Today that ideal was an accepted commonplace of public policy, but 100 years ago great courage was needed to assert it.

Civic Universities

The University of London was the pioneer of that great and beneficent movement which within our own memory had given universities to almost all our large cities. These new civic universities were enabled by the keen civic consciousness which surrounded them, and by the sense of civic pride which supported them, to make a more direct impact on civic life than was possible in the vast and overgrown city of London. Yet truly there would be a grievous blank in the common life of London if there were not in its midst as an integral part of that common life an institution dedicated to the pursuit not of money or comfort or pleasure, but of truth, a place where some of its citizens were engaged day by day in the disinterested service of knowledge, an abiding witness to the things of the spirit.

He was not thinking chiefly of the university as an institution which prepared its students for profitable or useful careers, admirable as that purpose was. He was thinking of it precisely as an institution which cared for the things that do not pay, which pursued science apart from the profits its applications might bring to men, which gave honor to the studies once significantly called the "humanities"—a place, in a word, which bore witness to the truth that man does not live by break alone but by every word that cometh out of the mouth of God in nature or in the mind of men.

The Bloomsbury Buildings

Doubtless, the influence of the University on the common life of London had been hindered by the fact that hitherto it had had no central home. Now, thank God, that hindrance would be removed. The great building rising in Bloomsbury would be a visible reminder to London that it had its own university in its midst. It would radiate the influence of the University on the city with a new force and directness. It would appeal to the imagination of the citizens. He liked to think of the tower which would crown the new buildings taking its place with the great dome of St. Paul's. Each in its own way would give a witness to the one God—the God, who revealed Himself in the wonders, even if He sometimes hid Himself in the mysteries of the universe. Thus it was that University and Church joined in upholding before the City of London their own special witness to the one eternal God.

The Lord Mayor presided at the luncheon at Guildhall, and had on his right the Chancellor of the University, the Earl of Athlone.

Danger of Knowledge

Lord Halifax, proposing the toast of "The University of London," said that he spoke not as a Cabinet Minister but as Chancellor of the University of Oxford—a much safer role. It was a great honor for the Chancellor of the oldest university in this country to propose the toast of the largest university in this country, and the largest, indeed, of the universities within the British Empire.

One of the most remarkable things of last century was the step taken to found the great University of London and nail to its mast the flag of extended university education." It was not remarkable that people should then have thought that the progress of the human race was automatic provided that university education could be widely diffused. It was more fully realized now that that was a dangerous half-truth. Civilization and culture were plants of singularly tender growth, constantly in peril of extended knowledge. The old saying, "A little learning is a dangerous thing," might be re-written today: "Much knowledge is a dangerous and disastrous thing unless it is directed by something greater than itself." They had only to think of man's discovery of aeroplanes, of chemical laws and products; and even of the internal combustion engine, to realize how dangerous they could be unless they were guided and inspired by that which was something greater than themselves—wisdom. Civilization must depend on training men to become masters rather than victims of their own inventions.

No greater end could be set before a university, and they could wish no better thing for London University than that for the next critical century in her history she might continue to inculcate those principles to which in the past 100 years she had been faithful.

England Must Rebuild Fleet, Hoare Asserts

Admiralty Head Says Isles Vulnerable And Is Matter Of 'Life Or Death'

Great Britain is to have virtually a new fleet, capable of going anywhere, Sir Samuel Hoare, First Lord of the Admiralty, announced in a speech at Southampton on July 11. This he declared "is a matter of life or death to us" because, if the sea communications of Great Britain were cut, its people would die of starvation within six weeks.

Hoare admitted that the air power threat from the European continent had turned this country, once the most secure island in the world, into the "most vulnerable society in Europe." He outlined the building program by which Britain hopes to produce an air force equal to any in Europe and a navy far superior to any but the American, according to Joseph Driscoll in the New York Herald Tribune, whose London despatch of July, 11 continues:

"If our sea communications are cut," he said, "we have a supply of raw materials that will last our industries for three months. But that supply would be more than we should need, for within six weeks we should be dead of starvation.

"This is the overwhelming reason that makes reconstruction of our fleet so vitally important. We have delayed so long in its rebuilding that we are now faced with the problem of building what virtually amounts to a new fleet. That this fleet should be built upon the right lines is a matter of life and death to us.

"As our life depends upon free passage through the seven seas of the world, our fleet must be strong enough to go anywhere and carry out its duties in any conditions. It is our determination to have such a fleet and to build it with the least possible delay."

Discussing the air menace, Hoare, who was himself Air Minister for seven years, said:

"The formidable fact about air power is that it has made what was once the most secure island in the world into the most vulnerable society in Europe. Here within a few minutes' flight of the continent is gathered together a vast population living in the conditions of the richest and most complicated civilization that the world has ever known.

"A crushing blow struck at so vulnerable a target might have effects the evil results of which we cannot even imagine. A mortal blow might be struck at the heart of the empire. For the first time in our history the heart of the empire has become vulnerable.

"Such a state of insecurity cannot be allowed to endure. I care not from what quarter our security is challenged, our reply to the challenge must laways be the same. This is not a question of partisanship for or against this or that country in Europe. It is an established principle of British policy. It is, indeed, the basic condition of British life that wherever and whenever our security is endangered it is our bounden duty to make such preparations as will remove the danger.

"It is on this account that we are proceeding with our great program of air reinforcement. It is with the determination to reach at the earliest possible date air parity with the strongest power within range of these shores that we are creating our new squadrons and producing our new machines."

Striking back at the Laborites and Leftist politicians who assailed his part in the Hoare-Laval peace terms to end the Italo-Ethiopian war, the First Lord charged that while these opponents opposed Britain's arms program they had "clamored for action that five years ago would have involved us in an unilateral war with Japan and five months ago would have involved us in an unilateral war with Italy."

Noting that it is the fashion in certain quarters to disparage the leadership of Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, Hoare defended his chief, saying:

"Far better than the pacifists, he represents, as no other man represents, the forces of peace in the country. Through all these difficult months, as I know better than any one, he has been determined to prevent the conflagraton of a European war. There were many months when a less steady determination to pursue the path of peace might have plunged Europe into one of the greatest catastrophies in the world's history."

Admiral Sir Edward R. G. R. Evans, speaking at Gillingham today, declared:

"Nobody will ever pull a live lion's tail, and if the old British lion wakes up, stretches himself and gets his teeth and claws put in order, I don't think we have anything to fear."

WPA Worker Roll Falls To 2,268,542

Total On June 20 The Smallest Since Large-Scale Operations Began

The number of persons employed by WPA on June 20 was 2,268,542, representing the smallest number since large-scale operations began last November, according to Aubrey Williams, Acting WPA Administrator. The number of persons employed on the entire Federal Works Program was also at a record low of 3,338,267 on that date.

Noting that peak employment on on the WPA program was 3,036,000 in February and on the entire work program 3,853,000, Mr. Williams reported that "return of workers to private payrolls has been responsible for much of this reduction," according to the New York Times.

Many WPA workers were transferred to projects operated by other Federal agencies, he said. WPA now provides employment for only 68 per cent of those on Federal work jobs, whereas it cared for nearly 79 per cent on Feb. 29. With 55,000 now being put on WPA jobs in drought-stricken areas, it was uncertain what final effect the drought would have on WPA rolls.

Of the 226,337 persons employed on June 20 on the Federal work program in New York City, 206,999 were working for WPA and 10,062 on emergency conservation work. In up-State New York, of the 140,458 employed 101,961 are on WPA jobs.

More than 2,400,000,000 man-hours of work were supplied by WPA through expenditures of more than $1,300,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, Mr. Williams reported.

WPA expenditures totaled $173,700,000 in May, representing a decrease of 5 per cent from April and 9 per cent from March. About $500,000,000 worth of supplies have been purchased from private industry as a result of the WPA prorgam to May 15, Mr. Williams said.

Mexico Withholds Bar Permits In Drive To Reduce Drinking

President Lazaro Cardenas of Mexico has not forgotten his campaign promise to fight the "vice of alcohol." Quietly his administration has been attempting to induce Mexicans to forswear the pulque and tequila, products of the maguey, they have been drinking since pre-conquest days.

With Dr. Jose Siurob, Secretary of Public Health, as head of the movement, the temperance campaign has been carried forward over the radio, through the newspapers and by personal appeal. Besides, the Department of Health unostentatiously has been refusing permits to persons wanting to open bar rooms, and has brought pressure on the state governments to cooperate in this regard, according to the New York Herald Tribune. As a result many small towns, notably in the States of Tamaulipas and Coahuila, have no bars.

Recently the good-sized town of San Pedro, in Coahuila, at the urging of the Health Department and the National Anti-Alcohol Committee, decided to issue no further licenses for "cantinas."

Tabasco, where liquor-hating Tomas Garrido Canabal, while Governor, reinstated the ducking stool for drunkards, remains dry, and Sonora is just getting around to modifying the dry laws Rodlofo Calles, son of the former President, Plutarco Elias Calles, instituted as Governor several years ago.

A national prohibition convention, this nation's first, has been called for August. Honorary president of the organizing committee is Cardenas; active head, Siurob. Each government department has been asked to name two experts to address the convention on the effects of excessive drinking.

England Plans World Air Hub At Portsmouth

Zeppelin.

The airship, it is forecast, in some quarters, will prove the best medium for speedy ocean crossings. It is pointed out that Germany has taken it past the experimental stage and made under 40 hours look an easy crossing time from New York to London. On the other hand, recent conferences in Washington discussing a heavier-than-air service are reported to have mentioned 48 hours as the time from the United States to Europe.

Will negotiations now taking place between Germany, the Netherlands and Japan result in a network of airship services over the oceans in a few years' time?

Second Line of Defense

Opinion is divided on this question. But if the airship succeeds on a wide scale, then Britain will doubtlessss lament with Sir Samuel Hoare that experimenting with lighter-than-air craft was dropped.

In the meantime there is consolation for the British taxpayer finding the £1,500,000 a year subsidy for commercial air services. A fine second line of air defense is being maintained both of pilots and planes.

And in comparison with the enormous sums now being voted for direct armaments, £1,500,000 appears as a small item, especially when it also ensures efficient air transport for British whether they are merely taking a week-end trip to Paris or a business dash to Australia.

KARUIZAWA NOTES

The fourth annual meeting of the Missions Mutual Fire Protection Association was held at the Karuizawa Auditorium at 10:30 a.m. Monday, August 3. According to its Constitution, this organization is not an insurance company. It is not a method of making money or declaring financial dividends. It has no salaried officers, neither does it employ anyone to further its interests. It is merely a group of missions doing christian work in Japan. It has no status as a 'legal person' and rests entirely on the confidence which the constituent bodies have in the world integrity of one another.

Though it has been in existence only four years, it now handles risks totelling over two million yen, and at this meeting it decided to extend its activities so as to include Korea and Formosa, where there are also groups anxious to join.

As this is a cooperative and not a company, everyone pays the same rate, viz., ¥2 per 100—excepting in the case of fire-proof buildings when the rate in 1 yen. At present single risks are restricted to ¥10,000., anything above that being handled by co-insurance.

Officers and members of the Executive Committee elected Monday were as follows: President, the Rev. D. S. Albright; Vice-President, Mr. Roy Smith; Treasurer, the Rev. J. F. Gressitt; Acting Secretary, Mr. G. Burnham Braithwaite. Other members of the Executive Committee are the Rev. B. F. Shively, D. D., W. M. Mories, L. D., and the Iev. E. H. Zaugg Ph. D.

60,000 In Ulster Join Orange Fetes

Craigavon Assails Efforts For United Republic; Catholics Held Fairly Treated

Orange drums boomed all over Northern Ireland on July 13 as 60,000 Orangemen held their annual demonstrations in commemoration of King William's victory at the Boyne.

Belfast, where the biggest procession was staged, was like an armed camp. Huge forces of armed policemen were on duty and armored cars moved constantly through the streets, says a Dublin despatch of July 13 to the New York Times, which continues: Troops were held ready in barracks in two centers to assist the civil authorities if necessary, but their services were not required. No serious disturbances were reported from Belfast or from other parts of the six northern counties.

Viscount Craigavon, the Premier, was the principal speaker at the largest gathering, held at Lambeg, to which 30,000 Orangemen marched from Belfast in a drenching rain. Orange-ism, Protestanism and the Loyalist cause, Lord Craigavon said are more strongly entrenched in Northern Ireland today than ever before.

Points to Credit Rating

After fifteen years under its own government, he declared, Northern Ireland has a credit rating almost as high as Britain's. He pointed out that Ulster's external trade last year had amounted to a record figure of more than £92,000,000.

Everything is being done Lord Craigavon went on to discredit the government of Northern Ireland in an attempt to obtain Ulster's absorption in an all-Ireland Republic. He said he feared the Free State was not merely drifting, but was being deliberately led into a republic of its own.

Denouncing the recent report issued by the British National Council for Civil Liberties on the treatment of the Catholic minority in the North as "an outburst of abuse and misrepresentation," Lord Craigavon said permanent retention of the Special Powers Act would be made an issue in the next general election. He declared Republicans, Communists, Socialists and Nationalists would have an opportunity to make out a case for its abrogation.

Notes Ties to Britain

Then the Premier spoke of Ulster's place in the British Empire and the ties of sentiment forming a bond to the mother country.

"Fellow-Ulstermen," he declared, "at all costs we must stand by Britain and be ever willing to make sacrifices."

Captain Herbert Dixon, speaking at a Belfast meeting, said loyalists in the North were faced with an alliance of Communists, Roman Catholics and rebel intellectuals banded together for the disruption of the British Empire. He denied that Catholics were victimized in Ulster and he cited as an example of "the extraordinary fairness of the Northern Government" a rule that he said was followed by the Ulster Labor Ministry. This rule, he said, requires that a third of the men employed on State-aided public works must be Catholic.

17.5-Mile Bridge In NY City Opens

by all of the other speakers, who included Governor Herbert H. Lehman, Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, Borough Presidents George U. Harvey, James J. Lyons and Samuel Levy, Othmar Hermann Ammann, chief engineer of the Triborough Bridge Authority, and Comptroller Frank J. Taylor. Senator Robert F. Wagner, who was scheduled to speak, was unable to attend the ceremonies, as he sailed at noon on the French liner Champlain for his summer vacation.

At 1:02 p.m., immediately after the ceremonies, which were closed by the playing of "The Star-Splangled Banner," President Roosevelt and a cavalcade of fourteen automobiles drove over the steel structure of the bridge.

To observers who have been in close contact with the Triborough for the last week, yesterday's opening, on schedule, seemed nothing short of a miracle. Until early yesterday morning the finishing touches on all parts of the monumental structure were still being applied, but no incompleteness was visible yesterday. The toll booths, which twenty-four hours before were still being erected, were complete, and functioned to perfection as soon as the traffic began to move over the bridge. The concrete pavement was clean as a whistle; all the supporting woodwork had been removed; the bridge's powerful lights were all in place, and, in short, the structure at 1:30 was functioning as a complete efficient unit.

Traffic immediately began to flow between all three boroughs and Randall's Island, held up momentarily by crowds of reporters and photographers who took pictures of the first automobile, motorcycle, bicycle and tandem to cross the bridge. The pedestrians were not far behind, descending like an avalanche from the Bronx and Manhattan approaches, most of them bent on reaching the stadium for the Olympic trials.

An indication of the amount of traffic which the bridge will carry may be gained from the first hour, when, according to Colonel Paul Loeer, executive director of the Authority's administrative staff, 11,100 vehicles paid tolls to cross the bridge. The first conveyance to cross the bridge, and the only one which did not pay toll after the opening, was an unidentified bicyclist who sped through from the Bronx and was away toward Queens before any one could catch him.

Signs Keep Traffic Straight

The police were in complete control of the traffic situation at all times, and there was practically no confusion, even on the Randall's Island intersections, where sixteen lanes of traffic wind about without a single one crossing the other. Large signs, erected within the last twenty-four hours, aided in directing the traffic to its proper destination.

Othmar Hermann Ammann, the engineer who more than any one else was responsible for the efficient operation of traffic on the bridge, received an eloquent introduction from Mr. Moses, who early in 1934 obtained his services for the Triborough from the Port Authority.

Widespread Employment Is Cited

Mr. Ammann said the Triborough was outstanding, not because of the size and character of its complicated parts, but because "it is a modern traffic artery through a great metropolis, planned to combine speed and safety as well as a form of recreation to the traveling public to an extent not equaled in any similar project."

He said the bridge had produced widespread employment in the 600 manufacturing plants in thirty states which have furnished products for it.

"New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania," he said, "furnished sand, stone and cement for the 2,000,000 cubic yards of concrete. Ninety-one thousand tons of steel and iron products were produced in the mills and shops of thirteen states, from Rhode Island to Indiana and south to Alabama. Large quantities of timber were cut in the forests along the Atlantic coast south to Florida and Louisiana, and on the Pacific coast in the State of Washington."

Mr. Ammann said that under the seventy-four contracts which covered the construction of the bridge, more than 200 contractors, who at times gave work to 3,000 men on the project, were employed. He closed by expressing his deepest sympathy to the families of the twelve men who were killed during the building of the Triborough.

Harvey Calls It "Proud Day"

Borough President Harvey, of Queens, who was invisible to the spectators behind the speakers' stand, praised the vast approach system of the Triborough. He said the bridge led directly to the heart of the Flushing meadows, where the 1939 World's Fair will be held.

Calls Roosevelt Greatest Leader

Mr. Lyons was loud in praise of President Roosevelt and the "humane" Congress which provided a part of the funds for the bridge. Turning to the President, he said: "In the words of Tennyson, 'The fire of God filled him, I never saw his like.' There lives no greater leader than our great President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

Comptroller Taylor said the bridge would be a great "advertisement to the City of New York." He also praised Mr. Moses.

About the time that Mr. Taylor finished his speech, the 3,000 spectators, who sat listening intently in spite of the broiling heat began to protect themselves from the devastating rays of the sun. Some of them used newspapers as parasols, and others, more mechanically minded, converted their souvenir programs of the bridge into three-cornered hats. Most of the men in the audience had removed their coats. They were generous in their applause, and Mr. Moses, in his introduction of Mr. Ickes, was forced to halt three times until the clapping subsided. The parapet in front of the speakers' stand was decorated with the flags of the United States, New York State and New York City. They formed an effective contrast to the dead white color of the bridge concrete.

George V. McLaughlin, vice-chairman of the Authority, spoke very briefly, saying that the bridge had been completed after "twelve years of talk and two years of action." This was not strictly accurate, as construction on the project began in 1929 under Mayor James J. Walker. He said the bridge would allow the more extensive use of automobiles in and about New York City.

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, who introduced the President, said that the bridge, once a fantastic idea, now was a reality, due "entirely to the Public Works Program of the Federal government."

"While supplying a great public need," he said, "the construction of this bridge afforded employment to thousands of skilled and unskilled workers, a long "workline" of artisans and toilers—from the bridgehead in the city to the factories and railroads, down to the very mines and in the forests all over the country—an encouraging contrast to the breadline of former days. Workers were peering over blueprints instead of jobless peeping into food stores."

In dedicating the bridge the Mayor said, in conclusion, "We dedicate ourselves to the building of a greater bridge, which will permanently join the land of liberty and equality to a system of economic security."

During President Roosevelt's speech the spectators were slightly cooled by a gentle breeze from the west. It did not last long, however, and the sun went back to its work. It was so hot that newspapers were placed on the seats of the President's open automobile to keep them cool enough to sit on.

Postmaster General James A. Farley, who sat on the official platform but did not speak, told reporters earlier in the day that President Roosevelt was pleased to be present at the dedication of the bridge, inasmuch as the Triborough was the second project to be approved by the Public Works Administration.

Hitler Ends Peril By Vienna Accord

time, step by step National Socialist Germany by her own methods is steadily gaining all that Republican Germany found it impossible to achieve.

Milestones On Reich's Road

Note the successive milestones on the road of National Socialist foreign policy and how one by one they have been successfully passed. All were laid down and charted long ago.

In October, 1933, Germany announced her discontent with the League of Nations and the disarmament conference and left both.

In January, 1934, Hitler made his peace pact with Poland, temporarily giving up all idea of recovering Pomorze, the so-called Polish Corridor, and recognizing the accomplished fact in return for a friendship that has helped immensely in many directions since.

That was a year of internal adjustment for National Socialism in the Reich, not without violence and serious repercussions in the outside world. It was in July that the abortive Nazi putsch in Austria and the assassination of Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss brought Italian troops to the Brenner Pass. The Nazism retreated and the danger passed.

In January, 1935, Germany recovered the Saar and Hitler renounced Alsace-Lorraine. There remained for Germany, he said, no further territorial claims on France.

In March, 1935, Germany reintroduced conscription in defiance of the military clauses of the Treaty of Versailles and despite the foreign clamor over that violation.

In June of the same year, despite that clamor, Hitler made his naval agreement with Britain, conceding permanent British superiority at sea.

Again there was a lull devoted strenuously to rearmament until March of this year, when Germany denounced the Locarno Treaty and remilitarized that Rhineland.

Now, four months later, Danzig has come into the picture. Simultaneously Hitler has made peace with Austria. He has liquidated the Dollfuss putsch, satisfied Mussolini and achieved a new triumph.

K.S.R.A. TOURNEY

Two lame ducks were played in the men's A singles on Thursday when Ohta flat-footed a two set match to his opponent. Ohta again was unhorsed by an apparently weaker player, in a seemingly poor condition of health. Wakata also showed somewhat crippled style and laid down to Fujisawa's forehand attack.

Shively tried too hard in his doubles and tensed nerves warped his style. Shively has had a very strenuous season, playing three matches in one day and having no relief from tournament play at any time. Fujisawa and Marquis Matsudaira combined to form a unique team which will make a strong stand for the Japan Times' Cups.

In the mixed doubles, Abe and Miss Yamagishi swamped Nipkow and Miss Weeks.

The B men's singles next step left all foreigners behind as Healy bowed to Ishikawa in a well contested struggle. Kurosu dodged Anderson out of his position while Draper held on grimly to the three-set scrap until Isshiki tumbled in a fast last set. Now the Japanese hold supremacy in all events except the B men's doubles. Baron Baeyens and Perreau stormed Anderson and von Jacobi out of a last thirty-game set while Hayashikawa and Kato pulled the wool over Tomitori and Isshiki.

The veterans' champion was declared in an unusual battle. Prof. Yamazaki stole a fast first set while Endow looked on. Endow evidently came to life and an 8-6 set ensued. Yamazaki earned his crown for the weather was far from cool and Endow put the ball into awkward corners. Prof. Yamazaki took double honors with his victory with Kosugi in the veterans doubles.

The Japanese ladies as usual played with faultless strokes and not very brilliant placements. Slow and determined they slaughtered one another leaving Miss Yamagishi and Miss Okada as the probable finalists. However, Miss Etani and Miss Harada may turn the tide in another direction although this is unlikely.

Men's Championship Singles:—Fujisawa defeated Wakata, score 6-1, 6-2. Uehara defeated Ohta, score 6-2, 6-3.

Men's Championship Doubles:—Fujisawa and Marquis Matsudaira defeated Abe and Shively, score 15-13, 6-3, 2-6, 4-6, 6-4.

Championship Mixed Doubles:—Abe and Miss Yamagishi defeated Nipkow and Miss Weeks, score 6-2, 6-2.

B. Class Men's Singles:—Ishikawa defeated Healy, score 6-8, 6-0, 6-7. Kurosu defeated Anderson, score 9-7, 6-3. Isshiki defeated Draper, score 6-2, 2-6, 6-4.

B Class Men's Doubles:—Baeyens and Perreau defeated Anderson and D. Jacobs, score 6-3, 16-14. Imada and Sugiyama defeated Toyoda and Izumi, score 6-1, 6-1. Hayashikawa and Kato defeated Tomitori and Isshiki, score 7-5, 7-5.

B Class Mixed Doubles:—Miss Christian and Imada defeated Miss Hayashi and Hayashi, score 6-4, 7-5. Miss Funstein and Baron Baeyens defeated Miss Patterson and Jacobs score, 7-5, 7-3. Mrs. Fichter and Orr defeated Mrs. Holbrook and Draper. score, 6-1, 6-0. Miss Teusler and Perreau defeated Miss Johnson and Warner, score 6-4, 6-4.

Ladies' Championship Singles:—Miss Yamaghishi defeated Miss Nishio, Score 6-4, 6-3; Miss Etani defeated Miss Ikeguchi, Score 6-4, 4-6, 2-6; Miss H. Harada defeated Miss Iida, Score 6-0, 6-3, Miss Okada defeated Miss Tomikawa, Score 6-2, 6-1.

Ladies' Championship Doubles:—Miss Yamaghishi and Miss Harada defeated Miss Lord and Miss Heselstine, Score 6-3, 6-1; Miss Fujikura and Miss Kondo defeated Miss Nishio and Miss Hayashi, Score 6-2, 6-2; Miss Okada and Miss Tomikawa defeated Miss Johnson and Miss Holbrook, Score 6-0, 6-0; Miss Ikeguchi and Miss Iida defeated Mrs. Haas and Miss Etani, Score 8-6, 3-6, 7-5.

Veterans' Singles Championship (Finals):—K. Yamazaki defeated Endow, Score 6-0, 8-6.

Veterans' Championship Doubles (Finals):—Yamazaki and Kosugi defeated Endow and Shively, Score 6-3, 6-1.

Calls Roosevelt A Harried Man

Hamilton At Wisconsin Convention Assails President On 'Economic Royalists'

John D. M. Hamilton, Republican campaign chief, on July 8, called President Roosevelt's reference to "economic royalists" that of "a harried and driven candidate," according to the New York Times.

"Who are these economic royalists?" Mr. Hamilton demanded in a speech delivered before the Wisconsin State Republican Convention. "We are not told.

"They are no more identified than those mythical great bankers who, according to the President, told him our national debt could safely go to $70,000,000,000."

The President put the phrase "economic royalists" into the 1936 political dispute with his acceptance speech at Philadelphia on June 27. In that speech he said:

"Out of this modern civilization, economic royalists have carved new dynasties. Our allegiance to American institutions requires the overthrow of this kind of power."

Mr. Hamilton's reply tonight came in criticizing Secretary Morgenthau's recent radio report on Federal finances. Mr. Hamilton said the report "failed to convey the entire truth," and declared the voters would demand specific information on the national deficit.

He Attacks "Straw Men"

Then he added:

"Nor will the electorate's insistence be diverted by the setting up of straw men, whether by President Roosevelt or others.

"It knows well how to appraise the import of a charge made by a harried and driven candidate that all his opponents are economic royalists.

"The nation would be more impressed by the President's declaration of war against these assumed economic despots, who gamble with other people's money, if it were not sick of wars and much more interested in the very practical task that has been under way for a month, the task of stopping the encroaching despotism of personal government that has appropriated to itself more of other people's money than any other administration in American history."

Mr. Hamilton directed another of his shots at his rival campaign manager, James A. Farley, Democratic National Committee Chairman.

"Until today," said Mr. Hamilton, "I was unable to decide whether the recent uncertainty of Mr. Farley's governmental position was due to a belief that he was a liability or whether it resulted from the conviction that the party's hold on power was so precarious that it must have Mr. Farley's undoubted talents concentrated on its own affairs, unhampered by the trying task of drafting new issues of postage stamps.

Hits Roosevelt as Governor

"The explanation now seems clear. Mr. Farley takes leave of absence only until after election."

Mr. Hamilton told his audience that the American electorate was "determined to eliminate gambling in securities and commodities" and "gambling in government" as well. He continued:

"But it has determined that progress toward both these ends can be made more effectively through a President who, as Governor of Kansas, was able to bring results through the enforcement of existing law than under a President who as Governor of New York witnessed the greatest speculative orgy within the borders of his own State that has ever been seen and who watched millions of people sucked into the vortex and yet lifted neither a restraining finger nor uttered a warning word.

"There is no other explanation for such reticence by Governor Roosevelt than that he found it politically unadvisable to attack speculation when it was popular."

The convention opened with an invitation to Democrats and Progressives to join in a crusade, "in defense of Americanism."

The bid for support from all anti-New Dealers, no matter what their party label, was made by Charles F. Smith, Wausau attorney, in the keynote address.

Kohler Eliminates Himself

Before the convention opened, former Governor Walter J. Kohler eliminated himself as a prospective candidate for Governor. Alexander Wiley, Chippewa Falls attorney, and Julius Heil, Milwaukee manufacturer, were active candidates for the nomination. Whether the convention would make any endorsement or would invite all candidates to enter the primary was expected to be decided tomorrow. Mr. Smith said the issue today was:

"Shall the free, liberty-loving democracy given us by Washington at the cost of the Revolutionary War, preserved to us by Lincoln at the cost of the Civil War, now give place to Socialism, Communism or Fascism?

"We, as Republicans, would be glad to join with you Democrats and Progressives under your party to fight this war in defense of the institutions that we love and cherish. But your Democratic organization has been stolen by the enemy, your Progressive organization is but a limited one-State organization."

Realization Of Continuity Of Religion Is Needed

This is true not only of Christianity but also of every other great world religion — Confuscianism, Buddhism, Zoroastrianism, Judaism, and Muhammadanism. With the normal restraints of religion removed, with man's spiritual conscience obscured as his scientific intelligence is accentuated, we see taking place a rapidly growing chaos and a threatened disintegration of world civilization.

Clearly the time is ripe for a renewal of man's spiritual consciousness, and that renewal is already offered the world in the Revelation of Baha'u'llah. Here we find not only a renewal of all the spiritual beauty and dynamic force of previous revelations, but also pronouncements especially adapted to the advanced needs of this day. We have not only general moral laws, but their definite application to individual and collective living. We have a comprehensive set of principles upon which the establishment of a great world order is predicated, and a great world civilization of a perfection such as the past has hardly ventured to dream of.

VIII
Continuity of Religion

Of all the teachings of Baha'u'llah, perhaps none is so needed as the clear enunciation which He gives regarding the continuity of religion. As we have pointed out at the beginning of this article, the lack of such realization has been the cause of the crystallization of religious thought and expression and its disintegration into religious rivalries and hostilities never intended by the Divine Power from whose great Purpose for humanity all religions emanate.

Baha'u'llah makes clear not only that His Revelation is a renewal of spiritual truth and potency necessitated by the decline of spiritual consciousness throughout the world; but also that, just as other religions have faded and declined, so the religious expression built around His message is also destined to decadence, in the course of time. Thus He definitely prepares His followers and safeguards them against the dangers of bigotry, of religious smugness, and of blindness to the just and verifiable claims of a new Revelator when His day arrives.

How refreshing is this view of religion, which is now seen as a part of the normal functioning of our planetary life, as necessarily recurrent as are the seasons. Indeed each religion passes through its phases of growth comparable to the seasons—its springtime of blossoming and rejuvanescence, its summer of growth, its autumn of rich fruitage, and its winter of crystallization and decline.

SpiritualRe juvenation

And now again a spiritual springtime has appeared, and the Holy Spirit is pouring down Its rays upon this planet with a potency that is stirring everything to rapid motion and renewed growth. And as in the springtime old forms of vegetation, which in their sear and withered stiffness have lingered through the winter, become broken up by the actinic force of the sun and give way to marvelous new growths whose nourishment they help to furnish by their own decay, so today ancient institutions are falling and every old form is yielding ground to a marvelous newness, which, however disconcerting it may be to unprepared minds, is the breath of life and hope to those who can see beyond the present moment.

"When the Holy Manifestation of God, who is the sun of the world of His creation, shines upon the worlds of spirits, of thoughts and of hearts, then the spiritual spring and new life appear, the power of the wonderful springtime becomes visible, and marvelous benefits are apparent. And now, in this divine new age, see what development has been attained in the world of minds and thoughts, and it is now only the beginning of its dawn. Before long you will see that new bounties and divine teachings will illuminate this dark world, and will transform these sad regions into the paradise of Eden."

The World In One Block

For Pete Pappas of Birmingham, Alabama, the world is just one city block. He likes the neighborhood in which he lives. In fact he likes it so well that he has not left the block on which his home is located in 20 years, although he has no physical handicaps or anything else to keep him from doing so. Twenty years ago, Pete walked into a restaurant and asked for a job. He went to work, settled down in rooms in an adjoining building, has never had any recreation except talking to his friends in the restaurant, and has never had any desire to see even the city of Birmingham.

Italy Denies Promoting Fascist Bloc In Europe

Ambassador Vittorio Cerruti of Italy visited the French Foreign Office on July 13 to "explain" Italy's part in the Austro-German accord.

He assured French officials, they said, that the Italian agreement to the accord did not mean the formation of a Fascist bloc in Central Europe and declared Italy intended to solve her own policy in Europe and work with Germany "only as far as Italy's own interests are concerned."

Afterward, officials expressed the opinion that Italy's refusal to participate at the Brussels conference of the Locarno powers without Germany was the price paid for Chancellor Adolf Hitler's guarantee of Austrian independence, says the New York Times.

If Italy and Germany are included in the meeting, it was said, France will seek to make the conference the first step toward a general settlement of Europe's muddled affairs.

K.S.R.A. TENNIS TOURNAMENT

Ebisu, the close to perfect tennis machine, Friday functioned successfully in three semi-finals, felling Abe, and the Ohta-Miss Kondo, and Matsudaira-Wakata combinations. Abe, who stumbled against Ebisu in the singles pulled every trick he had up his sleeve but a man cannot compete with an automaton. Abe never gave up pressing his game at net but Ebisu's slow sideline returns passed him repeatedly and his often brilliant shots were far in the minority.

Then men's doubles match was of no marked interest for each side took turns at smashing ideally placed lobs. If Tanaka, Ebisu's partner, continues his game, there is little doubt that this team will secure the Times Cup. To climax his day of victories Ebisu marched with Miss Ikeguchi over Ohta and Miss Kondo. It is fortunate that Ebisu does not play his finals until Monday for even machines need rest.

Uehara also survived the day in the championship singles when he out-guessed Fujisawa in a speedy straight set match.

In the B singles, Kurosu defeated Isshiki and Hayashikawa walked by Sughiyama after three slow sets.

An event for "Believe It Or Not" was the event in which Imada-Sugiyama ousted Baron Baeyens-Perreau 6-0, 0-6, 6-4. One is tempted to believe that they were tired, so consented to start the match with a set apiece. A love set again featured as Yamazaki and Ichikawa overthrew Hayashikawa and Kato.

The ladies matches resulted as expected. Miss Okada and Miss Yamagishi came through to the finals. As the tournament approaches its close, leaving the survivors to stage the climaxing thrills for the grandstand, a safe forecast for the men's singles would be to place the cup in Ebisu's hands, while his doubles combination is also favored.

Results: Men's Championship Singles:—Ebisu defeated Abe, score 6-3, 11-9, 6-3. Uehara defeated Fujisawa, score 6-3, 7-5, 6-4.

Men's Championship Doubles:—Ebisu-Tanaka defeated Matsudaira-Wakata, score 5-7, 6-4, 4-6, 6-3, 6-1.

B. Men's Singles:—Kurosu defeated Isshiki, score 6-0, 6-0. Hayashikawa defeated Sughiyama, score 7-5, 2-6, 6-4.

B. Men's Doubles:—Imada-Sugiyama defeated Baeyens-Perreau, score 6-0, 0-6, 6-4. Yamazaki-Ichikaca defeated Hayashikawa-Kato, score 6-0, 6-2.

Championship Mixed Doubles:—Ebisu-Miss Ikeguchi defeated Ohta-Miss Kondo, score 6-0, 6-2.

Ladies Championship Singles:—Miss Okada defeated Miss Harada, score 6-0, 6-0. Miss Yamagishi defeated Miss Tanaka, 6-0, 6-3.

Ladies Championship Doubles:—Miss Yamagishi and Miss Harada defeated Miss Fujikura and Miss Kondo, score 6-0, 6-3. Miss Okada-Miss Tomikawa defeated Miss Ikeguchi-Miss Iida, score 6-3, 6-3.

B Mixed Doubles:—Mrs. Christian Imada defeated Mrs. Funstein-Baeyens, 6-3, 6-1. Mrs. Fitcher-Orr defeated Miss Teusler-Perreau, score 6-2, 6-3.

Blind In United States To Be Supplied With More 'Talking Books'

President Roosevelt's approval of an allocation of $171,500 from the 1936 emergency relief fund for the manufacture of "talking books" for the blind was announced by Aubrey Williams, Deputy Works Progress Administrator, in Washington, D.C., on July 11. An allocation of $211,500 was made during 1935 for the project, which completed nearly 5,000 talking book machines and provided jobs for 300 men, many of whom are blind. This number is expected to be doubled with the new allocation.

Talking books have been distributed and are now in use in every state in the United States, Honolulu and Alaska, and in the leper colonies in Louisiana and Honolulu, Mr. Williams said.

A total of 4,992 machines have been made and distributed by the Library of Congress, sponsor for the project, through state commissions for the blind and twenty-seven main distributing libraries of the main library, according to the New York Herald Tribune. Free distribution has been made to settlement houses, hospitals, private institutions, homes, schools, community centers and other places where there are blind persons. The machines are loaned for an indefinite period just as library books are loaned for two weeks. The blind reader may keep the machine and apply for new sets of records as often as he desires. Both machines and records are mailed free in special containers.

Martin Roberts, assistant librarian of the Library of Congress and Federal director of the project, estimated that 5,000 more talking books could be made, with several hundred springdriven machines for use in localities where there is no electricity.

Records for the talking books are made by radio and stage artists, many of whom donate their services.

Heligoland Forts Fail To Stir British

Commons Little Interested In Confirmation That Reich Is Rebuilding Defenses

Official confirmation on July 13 of the fortnight-old report that Germany is kicking another hole in the Versailles Treaty by refortifying Heligoland was received in the House of Commons that day without arousing the slightest interest.

Asked if the refortifying had been begun by leave of the British Government, Viscount Cranborne, Parliamentary Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs, replied, "It is not being fortified by leave of anybody," according to Charles A. Selden in the New York Times. His London despatch of July 13 continues:

Destruction of the old German forts at Heligoland was carried out years ago in accordance with the terms of the Versailles Treaty, with the understanding that they should never be rebuilt. But that has gone into the discard, along with the prohibition of troops in the Rhineland. There was no provision in the recent Anglo-German naval treaty for keeping Helgoland unfortified.

Five Other Isles to Be Fortified

It is now understood that Chancellor Adolf Hitler is also going to fortify Borkum and four other small islands of the East Frisian group south of Heligoland, near the mouth of the Elbe River.

The House of Commons did not show much more interest in the new agreement between Germany and Austria and in the Heligoland incident. When Lord Cranborne said he had no information beyond the official reports from Berlin and Vienna, the House quickly dropped the matter.

There was no evasion Lord Cranborne's reply. The British Government knows literally nothing beyond what Hitler and Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg of Austria have seen fit to tell the world at large. So the Cabinet is worrying again in the dark, this time over what bearing the new arrangement in Central Europe may have on matters in which Great Britain is more directly concerned.

It is now taken for granted, because of Italy's approval of the Austrian accord with Germany, that there is already a cooperative understanding between Hitler and Premier Benito Mussolini.

British in an Awkward Spot

Italy's refusal to participate in the Brussels meeting of the Locarno powers unless Germany is there from the outset not only is taken as definite evidence that Berlin and Rome are ready to work together again it the Western powers but it has put the British Government in an awkward position. It is too soon after the Ethiopian war for Britain to want to be too ostentatious with her olive branches for Rome, even to avert a more serious situation in Europe. On the other hand, if France refuses to participate in the Locarno conference, as she is expected to do if Germany is present, Britain would find that situation just as difficult.

The French objection would be based partly on the ground that Germany has not answered the questionnaire Britain sent to Berlin in behalf of herself, France and Belgium. Hitler's failure to reply has become a very sore grievance in Whitehall and has slowed down the government's moves to bring Germany into a general European accord.

Under the immediate circumstances it would not surprise the British Foreign Office if the Brussels conference were postponed or canceled or else petered out into a meeting of only the British, French and Belgian delegates who could do nothing that Italy or Germany or both together might not upset the next day.

Fascism On Wane, Labor Chiefs Hold

European Leaders Voice Faith Democracy Is On Upgrade As London Parley Opens

Encouraged by their recent victories in France, Spain and Belgium, Europe's labor leaders met at London on July 8 convinced that democracy was again on the upgrade in its struggle against dictatorships.

The Fascist "menace" figured prominently in the speeches at the opening of the International Trades Union Congress, attended by delegates from twenty-two countries, but the belief was expressed that the tide had turned, according to the New York Times, whose London despatch of July 8, continues:

"The forces of democracy are resuming the offensive," said Walter Schevenels of Belgium, secretary of the International Federation of Trades Unions. And Sir Walter Citrine, president of the congress, declared that the recent triumphs on the Continent "illustrate the divergence of the trades union spirit and the rebirth of our movement's vital energies throughout the world."

It was the first time since the emergence of Nazism in Germany that leading trade unionists had spoken so hopefully about the future.

Sees War Risk Increased

Yet Sir Walter in his presidential address charged that the "short-sightedness, confusion and contradiction" of governmental policies in the last few months "have enormously increased the possibility of war."

It is a delusion, he said, to imagine that the labor movement is opposed to war in all circumstances. Labor supports a collective system backed by force, he declared, and "there must be no misunderstanding about our readiness to assist in organizing the defense of peace and the enforcement of international law."

Asserting that the chief fomenter of war in the world was fascism, Sir Walter called for strengthening the boycott against Nazi Germany. The boycott, he said, "is more effective than many of us realize, but it must be made more effective still."

Urges Backing for League

Organized labor was called upon to support the League of Nations by Sir Walter Citrine, president of the seventh International Trades Union Congress.

"The League must have behind it an organized force which will enable it to carry out its decisions," he declared. "This does not mean uncontrolled expansion of national armaments but rather an international agreement for pooling the armed resources of those nations which are intent on peace."

Sir Walter declared Italian Fascism and Nazism had "revealed themselves as lawless, aggressive imperialism which recognizes no right but the armed force it commands."

He expressed "profound concern" over the lack of progress of the movement for the forty-hour work week.

"Methods of obstruction and evasion adopted by employers' representatives with the connivance of some governments can delay but not stop this drive toward a shorter working week," he asserted. "One would have thought recent events in France and Belgium, if not brightening the economic outlook, would have hastened the accomplishment of this aim."

ANNUAL ROTARY CONVENTION

Word has been received that the annual Rotary Convention for 1937 will be held at Nice, France instead of London as first planned. This decision was reached at a recent meeting of the board of governors of the organization who were asked by the London Club to withdraw the British invitation, hoping for a postponement to 1938 in view of the closeness of the coronation ceremony of King Edward which would make the London hotel situation very uncertain for the anticipated attendance of 8,000 Rotarians from throughout the world.

Return To Germany Of Colonies Studied

are accentuated by the political boycott against her goods organized by the Jews in many parts of the world. And in addition Germany has had, as her leaders have admitted, great difficulty recently in purchasing the abnormal amounts of raw materials—certain metals, in particular—needed for her own rearmament.

There is an unavowed reason for desiring an independent control of colonial raw materials, and that is the desire to be less dependent on such supplies in case of economic sanctions applied in some future crisis by the League of Nations, or a strict interpretation of her neutrality laws by the United States.

Germany's Troubles

But in peace-time there are ample supplies of raw materials of all kinds. Germany, like other countries, is suffering in her export trade. This explains her currency difficulties when it comes to purchasing colonial products. More solidly founded is the German complaint about her lack of assured markets. There is certainly a grievance with regard to the results of the Ottawa Conference, by which the British Empire has made some progress along the road toward colonial preference. The old traditional British policy of the open door in her Crown colonies, as distinct from the self-governing Dominions, has been departed from. Although the trading opportunities in these colonies under the most favorable conditions are not so important as to make much difference to Germany's economic situation, the grievance does exist.

There is also a grievance—a justifiable one, felt not only by Germany—about present and past schemes for artificially restricting the supplies of tin, rubber, jute and other necessities of manufacture in order to raise prices. This cause of complaint could be removed without any transfer of sovereignty. The rubber restriction scheme broke down under its own weight.

Young middle-class Germans are taught to believe that there would be plenty of openings for them in the administrations, the police and the garrisons of the colonies if Germany had any. To meet this particular grievance a proposal is now being canvassed that certain of the present mandates, and also certain of the present colonial possessions of the European powers, should be transferred directly to the League of Nations and put under the administration of Geneva. In that case, the civil and other services would be recruited from all nationalities impartially.

Complaints Against France

I have dealt with Germany's complaints against the British Empire. The complaints against France are even more serious. The French for many years have pursued a short-sighted policy in their own colonies—they have always tried to favor their own nationals and to bar out the traders of other nations. Nor have the Belgians been without blame. In the case of the Congo basin there is supposed to be freedom for all; but in practice, as all the local officials are Belgians, the dice are loaded in favor of Belgian merchants and traders. The Portuguese have a bad record in this respect; but the Dutch have pursued a consistent policy of the open door.

To sum up the answers to the German economic reasons for desiring the ownership of colonies once more: It can be shown that, as a means of relieving present economic distresses, the advantages of colonies are greatly exaggerated. In the territories which Germany can hope to obtain peaceably there is little room for the settlement of surplus population, and the German trade position would not be greatly improved even if the whole of the tropical and sub-tropical colonies in Africa and the Pacific were transferred to her.

New Guinea, for example, under Australian mandate, is unhealthy for white men; and though this vast territory is reputed to be rich in raw materials it will need many years of effort and tremendous capital expenditure for these to be made available.

The psychological question of prestige remains.

Statistics and economic facts will not impress the under-paid, poverty-stricken German workmen and their families, or the jobless middle-class students who are told day in and day out that their troubles are due to the selfishness of the governments of the great colonial empires. Nor will a people that has suffered in the post-war years from the stigma of inferiority be placated unless they can regain the moral equality which Herr Hitler demands.

Just Solution

For these reasons it should be the duty of statesmen to seek a just solution. There is no reason why Britain should make all the sacrifices. France should certainly take her share. There will have to be safeguards for the existing settlers and the indigenous populations alike. There must be a cast-iron agreement that the German radical theories are not exported to Africa or the South Seas. There must certainly be safeguards against the recruiting of of negro armies.

But something more is required.

In September, 1935, the then Foreign Secretary, Sir Samuel Hoare, made a great speech at Geneva, declaring that the so-called dissatisfied powers should be given opportunities of access to colonial raw materials and markets. These sentiments were applauded all over the world. As part of a large settlement, the colonial territories of all nations should be regarded as being held in trust, and suitable opportunities for peaceful commerce be given to the traders of the world.

The United States of America is not a colony-owning power in the sense that Britain, France, Belgium, Japan and Holland are; therefore her merchants and traders also have an interest in this question. The economic difficulties of Europe go far deeper than any difficulties about colonies, as I have shown above; but something can be done to restore prosperity along the lines I have indicated.

Removal of Tension

If, at the same time, we can remove a sentimental grievance that has come to be generally felt, we shall have done something to remove the tension in Europe as reflected in the feverish war preparations and armaments races now in progress.

Another consideration is likely to actuate British policy in the long run. Can Germany be changed from a "dissatisfied power" into a satisfied nation, prepared to play her part in the League of Nations in defense of the principle of collective security? There has been a rupture of an ancient friendship between Britain and Italy. It will not be easily healed, especially as the British feel that the Italians believe themselves to be the victors in a contest over principles.

It will now be an object of British policy to prevent an alliance between Germany and Italy. Britain and France are both glutted with colonial territories, mandated and otherwise. If Germany can be made into a friend and the old feud with France ended, a high price could be paid. And then a re-united Europe could face a greater peril still of the future—the advance of Japan as an aggressive imperialistic power, threatening the peace of the world. In this direction the interests of the United States of America are directly involved.

Mercury In US West Up 175 Degrees In Half Year

A new highjump record for thermometers came out of the drought-baked plains in the United States recenttly: 175 degrees in less than six months.

The same fields that were scorched brown by the sun in July were piled so deep in snow in January that trains could not push through, says the New York Times. The Chicago despatch of July 8 continues:

Mercury columns then shrank as low as 55 below zero.

During the present heat wave they have been up to 120 above.

The difference is summed up in three words: the wind shifted.

In the chill of Winter, the weather man blamed it all on a steady flow of air from the arctics. Now the flow is just as steady—from the tropics.

Winter struck the hardest in the Dakotas, Minnesota, and Wisconsin. The drought is doing its worst in the Dakotas and Minnesota.

The bottom of the Winter was touched in Minnesota, with 55 below zero at International Falls. Across the border, in North Dakota, Wishek had 120 above, recently.

Alfonso Charges Marriage Fraud

Induced To Wed By His Wife's False Promises, Says Son Of Ex-King Of Spain

The complaint in the annulment suit by Alfonso de Bourbon, Count of Covadonga, son of the former King of Spain, was filed on July 8 in the Supreme Court of New York where the case was listed under the name of "Alfonso de Borbon against Adelmira de Borbon." The complain is signed by the plaintiff with the same spelling.

The complaint shows the suit is based on alleged false representations made by the defendant to induce the former heir to the throne of Spain to marry her, says the New York Times, whose report continues: It also says the former Spanish heir came to this country to earn a living and that he has regarded himself as a citizen of New York State since he arrived in May, 1935. The couple were married on June 21, 1933, in Lausanne, Switzerland.

"Between the months of May and November, 1935," says the complaint, "the plaintiff and defendant resided in the State of New York as husband and wife, and the matrimonial domicile of the parties was in the State of New York.

"The plaintiff is the eldest son of King Alfonso of Spain and heir apparent to the throne of that country. Plaintiff suffers from hemophilia and had so suffered for many years prior to the commencement of this action.

Tells of Meeting Defendant

"Prior to June, 1933, the plaintiff was confined to a sanitarium in Switzerland in an endeavor to regain his health and there met the defendant, who is not of royal blood. Such acquaintance ripened into friendship and thereafter the plaintiff and defendant discussed a contemplated marriage between them.

"Prior to the 21st day of June, 1933, the plaintiff told defendant of his affliction and tender health, which condition was permanent, and required constant attendance and aid in ministering to the wants and needs of the plaintiff. The plaintiff told defendant he could not and would not marry unless he was assured that his wife would look to his comfort and care and would devote to him the care and attention which only a wife who dearly loves her husband would be willing to render; that this would entail considerable sacrifice on the part of said wife.

"The plaintiff likewise told the defendant that his financial condition required him to earn his own livelihood and that in this connection it would be necessary for the plaintiff to go to America, live there and engage in business."

The defendant agreed to all his suggestions, the Count charges, in reliance on her representations and renounced his rights to the Spanish throne. He asserts that these representations were "wholly false, untrue and fraudulent," which the plaintiff discovered after his marriage. He asserts that if they had not been made he would not have entered into the marriage, "as the defendant well knew."

Countess Gives Her Views

The Countess of Covadonga declared in Havana on July 8 she most certainly would contest the annulment action brought by her husband. Tired and a bit nervous, the pretty Cuban commoner showed she was annoyed by charges that she had neglected the Count when he was ill last year.

"You boys know better than that," she told newspaper men. "All of you were there when he was ill, and you saw me at his side ministering to his ailments. You are my witnesses.

"Yes, I did refuse to go to the United States with him when he left, but that was because I had been thinking for a long time of filing a divorce suit.

"Nothing ever was said between us, before or after our marriage, about living in the United States, and the charges that I broke an agreement to live there are as baseless as the charges that I neglected him.

"I will not go to New York. I shall stay right here."

A Matter of Weight

Overheard in Liverpool the other day.

Huge woman at door of small house, to little boy:

"Ask the butcher for a quarter of a pound of sausages for your father's tea." After a moment's reflection she added: "I feel a bit hungry myself; get a pound and a half, Willie!"—Liverpool Daily Post.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - - - by Ripley

Herman Bing Long Termer

Herman Bing, who has fussed and sputtered his apoplectic way through many brief scenes to walk away with the entire picture, has been placed under term contract by Columbia. Bing's outstanding comedy performance in the new Grace Moore starring picture "The King Steps Out" is directly responsible for his being placed under Columbia's banner for some time to come.

Mr. Bing has had a long and successful career in picture. He established his reputation as a comedian many years ago, and has a large following among cinema fans. Since the start of the present season he has appeared in nearly a score of productions. Some of the latest of these are, "Thunder in the Night," "Fighting Youth", "Redheads on Parade," "His Family Tree," "Three Kids and a Queen," "Hands Across the Table" and "$1,000a Minute."

Braces!

A woman of title was giving a garden party for her household staff and estate employees.

Old John, the gardener, had just stepped onto the tennis court to play a "single" with the chauffeur, when the footman hurried up to him and exclaimed, "John, her ladyship says you cant' play tennis in braces."

To which the worthy John replied: "You can just go back and tell her ladyship that I'm no good at this game unless I have both hands free!"—Tit-Bits.

RETURNS TO TOKYO

Miss Constance Warner who has been visiting in Karuizawa for the past several days, returned to Tokyo yesterday afternoon.

CONVALESCING

Miss Okada, the number one woman tennis player in Japan is convalescing in the Karuizawa Rest Home from an appendicitis operation. Miss Okada was forced to default from two final events, the ladies' singles and doubles in the Karuizawa annual tennis tournament.

KARUIZAWA NOTES

Monday morning's matches held little of the unusual and failed to draw much applause from the audience. The championship mixed, played the two sets merely as a formality for Abe and Miss Yamagishi directed the type of play throughout. Losing only two games, they marched through each set holding the lead far out of the reach of Uehara and Miss Iida.

Abe's serve was at its prime again so that Miss Iida often crumpled before its impact. Even Uehara failed to connect satisfactorily giving Abe many opportunities to bring his overhead slam into use. However Abe risked an exposed court for the sake of these decisive shots and his opponents were not slow to take advantage of the weakness. During Miss Yamagishi's service Abe took a permanent stance at the left of the server leaving an open right alley. This unorthodox method of protecting Miss Yamagishi's backhand was surprisingly effective. Tuesday will be the final test of the new combination when yesterday's winners will meet Yebisu and Miss Ikeguchi. The score of Monday's walkover was 6-1, 6-1.

It was learned yesterday that Miss Okada has been forced to undergo an operation for appendicitis and consequently will not be able to continue in her maches. This automatically makes Miss Yamaguchi the ladies champion and gives the laurels to Miss Yameguchi and Miss Harada in the doubles.

The one asset of the morning was the men's B semi-finals when Hayashikawa rushed the net in true Abe style and forced the braqket from Ishikawa to the tune of 6-0, 7-5. Errors crept in of course but considering it as a B class match, it was almost brilliant.

Another B class match which was the anthesisis of the singles was the final doubles. Yamazaki who has ready cornered the veterans singles and doubles, added another feather to his cap by taking the B men's doubles. With Ichikawa they piled up 11 games to the two won by Imada and Sugiyama. Dull and slow the deciding struggle fortunately did not take long and the winners were presented with their awards on the spot.

Canada Foresees End Of Wheat Surplus

way, however, it will lose in another. The calamitous weather conditions which have belatedly justified former Prime Minister R. B. Bennett's policy of holding Canada's accumulating surpluses off the market have put grain crops in many parts of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta beyond repair.

"Severe drought conditions," says today's crop report, "extend westward over a wide area from Southeastern Manitoba to the southern foothills of Alberta, having its greatest width in Western Saskatchewan. Practically all of Manitoba is included in this drought area except parts of the Red River Valley and extreme Northern districts.

"The Northeastern and East Central areas of Saskatchewan have fair prospects as yet, but the remainder of the Province shows a steady decline. A large Southern and East Central area of Alberta is drought stricken, but further North and in West Central Alberta heavier June rains were received and crops are holding up well under the hot weather."

Feed and seed again will be problems in many districts, the report concludes, "unless liberal rains fall very soon." This opens up the prospect that what the government saves in its pegging operations it may have to expend for drought relief.

Anti-GermanCamp Deserted By Ita.y

Her Withdrawal Evidently Is Hitler's Compensation For Shelving Austrian Aims

The Austro-German agreement concluded on July 11 has sent a thrill of triumph through the Italian nation, for it is regarded as definitely sealing the diplomatic victory that Premier Benito Mussolini gained over Britain and France, the two principal exponents of Geneva's policy of sanctions.

There can be no doubt that it heralds, indeed follows, part of a very precise and close understanding between Italy and Germany, which hitherto have been kept apart solely by their conflicting interests in Central Europe, says Arnaldo Cortese in the New York Times. His home despatch of July 12 continues:

Britain and France not only have been obliged to acknowledge defeat in their attempt, first to coerce Italy and then to punish her for conquering Ethiopia, but must now also recognize that the only result of their efforts has been to throw Italy and Germany into each other's arms.

Credit Given to Mussolini

The principal credit for turning the tables in this way on the two nations that have the most to fear and lose from a firm collaboration in the international field between the Italian and German dictatorships is attributed in Italy to Mussolini, who laid the basis for the Austro-German agreement in his recent meeting with Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg of Austria at Rocca delle Caminate.

If Mussolini should work from now on hand in glove with Chancellor Adolf Hitler a complete realignment of European nations would be brought about. This would produce changes so profound in the international picture that it is no exaggeration to say that a new foreign policy would start for all the governments in Europe.

Mussolini himself is sitting pretty with most of the aces in his own hand. He no longer has any reason to feel apprehensive for the Italian frontier at Brenner Pass or to feel that he must rely on the aid of France and Britain to keep Germany out of Central Europe. He is consequently now in a position to pursue a truly independent policy toward these two countries.

At the same time he has broken through the isolation in which sanctions had placed him. He is no longer a lone wolf biting back at the whole world but has entered into a powerful combination stretching across the center of Europe.

Stresa Front Pronounced Dead

What diplomatic circles are wondering about, not without some apprehension, is what use Mussolini and Hitler intend to make of their re-established friendship. One thing is certain, and that is that the Stresa Front is dead, for it is evident that the definite withdrawal of Italy from the anti-German combination is the compensation that Hitler has received for abandoning his aims in Austria. Italy is now in the other camp and everything leads to the belief that she inends to stay there.

Two courses seem to be open to Italy and Germany. The first is to organize themselves and their satellites into a bloc capable of acting as a counterweight to the group of powers headed by France and including Russia and the Little Entente. This would split Europe into two hostile units whose quarrels would keep the threat of war hovering over the world.

The second course is to form a new alignment of the great powers, to conciliate their interests and to organize them into a sort of league within the League of Nations. This would enable them in concert to exercise a guiding influence over the other States.

There is every reason to think that it is the second plan to which Mussolini's thoughts are turning. He was the father of the fourpower pact concluded just three years ago and he feels for it a father's fondness for his child.

Wants No European War

Moreover, the last thing Mussolini wants is a European war. For many years he will be fully occupied digesting and assimilating Ethiopia and he is not looking for any adventures that would distract him from this task. He is, therefore, in favor of an effort to get Italy, Germany, Britain and France together and see what can be done to eliminate the differences that are keeping them apart.

It cannot be denied that a fourpower pact would be very much more difficult to negotiate today than it was three years ago. The chief obstacle would be the Franco-Russian entente. It will not be easy to induce France, especially with her present Socialist government, to throw overboard her Soviet ally and it would be impossible to include Russia in the pact because Germany would certainly object most strenuously.

Italy, however, thinks the idea is not completely hopeless and in any case it is worth trying. It is thought Britain would fall in readily enough with the suggestion, for it is noted with satisfaction here that she has recently been going out of her way to please Italy.

The criterion of Britain's attitude toward Italy probably will be given by her reaction to the Italian reply to the invitation to attend the coming Brussels conference of the Locarno powers. Italy has said that she will not attend unless the agreements concluded by Britain last December with the various Mediterranean States are first rescinded. If Britain takes the hint and complies she will give proof of her desire to live in harmony with Italy.

But whether Britain has definitely made up her mind to recapture Italian friendship or not, the collaboration between the Italian and the German dictatorships is certain to change the course of European politics. It introduces a new element which existed up to yesterday as a possibility and today has become a reality that Britain and France in peace and in war must be prepared to cope with.

Mangrum Wins $5,000 Oregon Golf Tourney

Domei

PORTLAND, Ore., August 9—Ray Mangrum, of Pittsburgh, with an aggregate score of 278 for 72 holes, today won the $5,000 Oregon open golf tourney by a one-stroke margin over Al Zimmerman of Portland and Neil Christian of Yakima, Washington. The two latter handed in cards of 279 to tie for the runner-up position.

His Turn

The conductor came through the car, collecting fares.

"He's only five years old," remarked a mother when the official looked at her boy.

When the conductor reached the far end of the car, it occurred to the boy that an important bit of information had been overlooked.

"Mother is thirty-six!" he shouted.

Huge Leftist Parade Stirs French Citizens

spect the other's territory, they brandished their clenched fists provocatively and displayed their red insignia.

Lefists Dragged From Taxi

Immediately, before the police could stop them or interfere, the taxicab was surrounded. Its occupants were dragged out and there was a turmoil of flying fists and feet. In a few seconds it was over, with the police in possession of the battlefield.

But it soon began again. A private car with a red Phrygian bonnet on the windshield was spotted. It was greeted at first with hooting and yelling, then cannoned into by other cars and finally almost wrecked and halted, fortunately for the occupants, just in front of the protective police lines.

Then began there and in the Avenue Friedland a kind of general hunt for cars and taxicabs containing Popular Front adherents. One car was badly wrecked. Others had their windows broken. Some thirty people in all were injured. There was much rushing around and shouting while the police kept a steady, good-natured pressure on friend and foe alike.

Fortunately it began to rain and the dinner hour was nearing. By 8 o'clock peace reigned again on the Champs Elysees and "the Fourteenth" was over.

Herriot Sees Nation United

France was never more beloved by her children than now, Mr. Herriot declared at a luncheon today at Lyons, addressing himself especially to the consuls of foreign countries who were present.

He had taken part beside President Albert Lebrun at the military review in Paris in the morning and then flew down to Lyon for the luncheon.

"Tell the people of your countries," he told the consuls, "not to be disquieted for the fate of France by accounts of disturbance and division between Frenchmen. France has never been more beloved by her sons than now. There have never been so many of them united as now.

"I am sure I am right when I say that if there is some quarreling between Frenchmen it is because there is a kind of emulation in passion and devotion which leads them to want to show that they love their country most."

Blum Opposes "Hasty Action"

Premier Leon Blum, addressing the huge Popular Front gathering, warned France against "the danger of impatience and hasty action."

He promised to revive "the great revolutionary tradition," but urged the country's workers to abandon their strikes, and added:

"The forms in which workers' demands have been made have contained serious risks that it is our duty to point out when their effect is to cause or prolong a condition of uneasiness or alarm."

Any reaction from his program of change, which he called the "greatest attempt since the beginning of the Third Republic," would unfailingly provoke disorder," the Premier declared.

There were demonstrations similar to that of the Leftists in Paris in provincial cities, with Nationalist counter-demonstrations in some places and several clashes.

Reich Resurgence Held Unstoppable

Soviet Writer Sees Austrian Pact Step In Domination Of Balkans And Danubians

The first Soviet editorial comment on the Austro-German agreement appeared in Izvestia in an article by Karl Radek entitled "German Preparation." The report in the New York Times from Walter Duranty in Moscow, dated July 14, continue:

"No one can doubt that Hitler has opened the door by which he wishes to enter," declares Carl Radek. "Thanks to his agreement with Vienna, Hitler enters Austria and knows that the people on his side will be active there. These people undoubtedly are preparing for a union of Austria with Germany and are facilitating a German advance in the Danubian and Balkan countries.

Locarno Powers Defied

"The Austro-German agreement is a stage on this road. Whether Germany takes part in the Brussels conference of the Locarno powers or not, she has already told the organizers of the conference:

"'With your agreement or without it, I am going forward. You have not yet been able to reply to the remilitarization of the Rhineland, but I am already preparing for the return of Danzig and the union of Austria with Germany.

"'Furthermore, I am independent of you and can make a deal with italy directed against you.'

"That is what Germany says to France and Great Britain, and she hopes they will understand it."

Mr. Radek suggests that Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg was more or less forced into the agreement by his own internal weakness. He sugests that the Austrian Chancellor tried first to hold his power by the support of the Right Social Democrats, but that this proved ineffective because they had no control over the mass of the population, so his only alternative was a deal with the Nazis, which, in Mr. Radek's opinion, was virtually equivalent to surrender.

Mr. Radek clearly regards the German-Italian rapprochement more as a maneuver thus far, with the aim of influencing France and Great Britain, than as a reality; but he points out that it may become a reality should France or Britain fail to react as Italy and Germany desire.

Italo-German Air Pact Cited

He adds that already there is the important fact of new air agreement permitting Germany to use Italian islands of the Dodecanese group. Such facts, Mr. Radek continues, "have their own logic, which leads to consequences that far surpass the intentions of the parties who make such agreements."

Regarding Danzig, Mr. Radek takes for granted that its return to Germany is the next step in the Nazi program and is only a matter of time. If Poland does not like it, he says in effect, Poland will have to lump it, because Poland is in no position to resist Germany, either by force or by diplomacy.

In Moscow it is believed—and this is the meaning of Mr. Radek's caption, "German Preparations"—that the German agreement with Austria and economic and political penetration of the Balkans are a prelude to isolation of Czecholsovakia in order "subsequently" to restore to Germany "two and one-half million German nationals now living in Czechoslovak territory."

That is the aim, it is understood here, at which the Austro-German agreement is directed. Moscow does not expect it to be attempted for a year or two, partly because Germany needs time to consolidate her position in South and Central Europe and to recover Danzig, and partly because the German Army is not yet fully ready for such an overt challenge to Europe's territorial status quo.

THE CHOICE OF THE MULTITUDE

Eight Go On Trial In Puerto Rico Plot

Pedro Albizu Campos, president of the Nationalist party, went on trial in San Juan on July 14 with seven other persons, accused of conspiracy to overthrow the United States Government in Puerto Rico.

It was revealed that his testimony before the grand jury indicated that he was the commander-in-chief of the "Army of Liberation," which had recruited 10,000 members up to last January, according to the New York Times.

In the transcript of his grand jury testimony, introduced in evidence over his counsel's objection, he stated that his army was unarmed. But he said he had advised Nationalists individually to arm.

His statement also contained the assertion that the 150,000 Puerto Ricans in New York were all Nationalists in sentiment if not actually enrolled in the party.

Never Petitioned U. S.

Responding to a grand jury question whether he or his party had ever petitioned the President or Congress for Puerto Rican independnce, Mr. Albizu Campos answerd "no," explaining that the time for that would come when the Nationalists were in a majority and could hold a constitutional convention to declare a republic.

Asked what would happen if Washington then refused to grant independence, Mr. Albizu Campos replied that his followers would have to take "drastic measures."

Protests Secrecy at Trial

Attorney Toro Nazario, representing Pedro Albizu Campos, demanded dismissal of the conspiracy charges today on the ground that the sessions were not public because of rigid police precautions against disorder.

Never in the history of the island, he said, had defense counsel been searched. He also declared women witnesses had been humiliated by the search process.

The court, however, ruled the United States Marshal had not exceeded his duty in ordering the trial restrictions.

Japanese Trade Seen As Important To U.S.

Japanese statistics, imports from the United States in 1934 exceeded exports to the United States in the ratio of about one and nine-tenth to one, and roughly, the same situation appears in United States figures.

"The chief factors contributing to this reversal of Japan's trade balances with the United States and with all other countries combined were (a) the fall in the price of raw silk, (b) the expansion of Japan's export of commodities for which other countries offered better markets than the United States, and (c) the fact that much of the expansion of Japan's exports in recent years has been in products made from materials of which the United States is a major supplier, notably raw cotton.

Trade Statistics

"The following table shows Japanese statistics of trade with the United States and with all other countries combined. United States statistics would disclose roughly the same changes in balances of trade between this country and Japan as are shown in the Japanese statistics." Figures are in millions of yen.

"Trade with the United States:—exports '30, 506; '31, 425; '32, 445; '33, 492; '24, from Japan, '24-'28 (average) 854; '29, 914; 309; 9 months ending September: '34, 293; '35, 374. "BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - - - by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Father of Modern Cookery

Benjamin Thompson of North Woburn, Mass. (1753-1814), was a Tory in the Revolutionary War and settled in England at its conclusion. He was knighted by King George III, and later entered Bavarian services, serving as Minister of War and of Police in Munich. He was ennobled by the German Emperor, being created a Count of Rumford after the city of Rumford (Concord) N.H. which was his wife's native town. He was the first physicist to analyze the phenomenon of heat. He taught the world how to cook and was the first to note the changes in nutritive value of foods cooked on a large scale. The science of modern cookery has advanced but little since Benjamin Thompson, who was the first to apply to it the insight and method of a scientist. He is the man who abolished the smoky chimney, and substituted for it the modern fireplace, stove and oven. He invented cooking by steam.

Social and Personal Notes

KARUIZAWA TENNIS TOURNEY CLOSES

The Japan Times Cup was cornered by Ebisu and Tanaka 6-2, 6-3, 6-0 Wednesday, when they refused to bow to the superior teamwork of Marquis Matsudaira and Fujisawa. Ebisu played startling tennis considering his previous play. He risked open sections of the court and played impossible shots at every opportunity. This reversal of style labels him as a versatile player with no small future and his steps should be followed by enthusiasts.

Matsudaira and Fujisawa worked as a unit but they seemed to be unable to give the last small push that clinches a game. Nevertheless, it was tennis that keeps the audience under a strain and up to the last point Ebisu had to keep on his toes.

The lobbing on both side was poor as it usually is in Japanese play but the drives and pick-ups were dazzling. Speed and spectacular recoveries did justice to the efforts of the losers so that without a doubt, Ebisu and Tanaka earned their crown.

Abe and Miss Yamagishi again laid claim to the mixed doubles when Abe revenged his defeat in the singles from Ebisu 6-3, 6-3. Abe in top form held the spotlight as he man-handled the ball for a quick victory. Miss Yamagishi gave him due support and Ebisu teamed with Miss Ikeguchi could not stop the onslaught. Ebisu had already played the part of mainspring in a three set doubles so he began with his style dimmed by fatigue. He bore up however and led the list of spectacular plays.

Abe seems to be blessed with the ability to amass points for his unobtrusive shots did not seem to feature as largely as Ebisu's more frantic ones. Miss Yamagishi also did not seem to have the impetus Miss Ikeguchi commanded, yet apparently the loser team walked through their opponents unhindered.

The K.S.R.A. Tennis Tournament closed with the presentation of trophies by the American Ambassador to the winners of the various matches.

US Conservation Plan Seeks Nature's Aid

more than thirty years in which to bring into operation a nation-wide plan of soil conservation. After that it will be to late. And there is so much to be done that thirty years are not more than enough.

The Mississippi Valley Committee, which reported on the problems of that vast area; the National Resources Committee, which is now a permanent survey and planning body, and the Soil Conservation Service, now a part of the Department of Agriculture, are the conspicuous new agencies which have dealt with conservation.

This, however, merely begins to tell the story. At the beginning of the present year the National Resources Committee listed "no less than thirty-four individual agencies of the government concerned with water-resources work in one way or another"—and water resources are only one phase of the great problem.

Until the past three years the permanent agencies in this field suffered through lack of a central clearing house for their information—a role now enacted by the National Resources Committee.

Four stages can be recognized in the process of finding out what is wrong with the land and water of the United States and beginning to do something to set the wrong right. The first stage is that of surveys and inventories—what are the resources of the country and what shape are they in?

The second stage is that of organization—what parts shall be played by the national, State and local governments and by private owners? The third stage is that of immediately necessary projects—where are the dangers from erosion, floods, droughts and other acts of nature most threatening and what can be done about them? The fourth stage is that of the long-time program—what policies can be followed that will make the United States (unlike vast areas in China, Asia Minor, Central America, even parts of Spain, Italy and France) a "permanent country"?

Physical Facts Unknown

Down to the present time many of the physical facts about the United States have not been known. Although erosion has been studied for half a century or more—indeed, Thomas Jefferson was one of the first American farmers to notice its effects and to take steps to arrest it on his farm at Monticello—its actual stage and extent has just been measured. Knowledge of stream flows, of the level of underground water, even of rainfall, snowfall and evaporation, is still extremely sketchy over large areas.

River control programs have rarely taken the whole basin into consideration; the work now being done to master the Tennessee is the first of its kind. The Lower Mississippi levee and spillway system has not been coordinated with control of all the tributaries in their upper reaches. Relatively little has been generally known as to the suitability of lands having certain slopes, or certain cycles of rainfall, to different sorts of crops. The plowing off great stretches of the semi-arid Western lands is now seen to have been a mistake based upon ignorance.

Current and prospective surveys of the National Resources Committee and of its cooperating agencies, in Washington and in the States, will remedy most of these defects of knowledge. Aiding in the studies are forty-six State planning boards, most of them established since the beginning of the Roosevelt administration.

Typical of the sort of work being done is the "national survey of water use and control in the major drainage basins of the United States," as a result of which the National Resources Committee will summarize the outstanding national problems of water use and control; outline a broad and integrated program of development and recommend specific projects to be entered upon at once. The Federal and State governments are cooperating on this enterprise.

At the same time the Soil Conservation Service is carrying out demonstrations and spreading information intended to teach farmers how to save the fertility of their lands. Other demonstrations are being put through by the TVA and the CCC.

Even a severe drought is not necessarily ruinous if farmers have prepared for it by saving some of the forest and turf covering which holds water in the ground, by maintaining adequate ponds protected by trees or other means against excessive evaporation, by providing facilities for pumping, and perhaps, either cooperatively or in conjunction with State or Federal governments, assuring the construction of storage dams.

Problem Solved

The problem of "saving the country" has, in fact, been solved. The remaining problem is that of putting into effect what is known. Because of neglect the ancient civilizations on the Tigris and Euphrates perished, the golden land of China became a region of stern poverty and periodic famines, the pre-historic cities in Indo-China and Yucatan were abandoned, Northern Africa became a desert waste, and, until recent times, malarial swamps rendered desolate the once rich Campagna outside of Rome. If

"The lion and the lizard keep The courts where Jamshyd gloried and drank deep,"

the reason may be that Jamshyd treated nature as a slave, not as a fellow-worker and friend.

There is a democracy of land water, sunlight, winds, plants, animals, insects, birds and fishes in which man has his proper place. Modern conservation says that human democracy is safe only if it allies itself with these other elements all of which together make life possible upon the earth.

Anschluss Viewed As Matter Of Time

Political Control Of Austria By Reich Expected To Follow The New Agreement

The importance of the Austro-German accord announced in July is decisive for Central Europe and may be considerable for the relations of the great European powers. The accord is capable of producing alarming consequences unless they are prevented while there is still time.

The agreement in reality means Anschluss within a space of some years, or maybe months, but it is a peaceful Anschluss to which nobody may object, says Jules Sauerwein in the New York Times. The despatch of the foreign editor of the Paris Soir on July 12 from the French capital continues:

On paper, Germany has made concessions, since she admits Austria's independence and no longer demands a plebiscite or reorganization of the Austrian Cabinet. But as a matter of fact she is extending Austria in a way that will soon lead her spiritual and economic power over to political control. Chancellor Hitler has once more displayed a remarkable power of gauging the right moment and has shown a shrewd choice of method.

Immediately the accord is important for the effects it may have upon the European situation on the eve of the Brussels conference. As the Rome protocols are expressly reserved in the Austro-German accord, it is evident Italy has given her consent. It would be to slight Premier Mussolini to suppose for an instant that he does not see all the consequences of that accord. Germay's influence over Austria becomes preponderant, and through Austria can be made to extend over the rest of Central and Southeastern Europe. Yugoslavia already is closely associated with Germany in the economic field.

Mussolini is, therefore, abandoning to Germany the rich domain over which he aspired to establish hegemony. Maybe he has received important concessions in return, but the writer is of the opinion nothing has yet been definitely settled and he does not believe Mussolini will easily be induced to bind himself completely to any European bloc to which France, Great Britain and Russia are opposed. Mussolini is more likely to propose some vast combination of great pwers, which he has always sught—some combination such as the four-power pact.

Soviet Experts Discover New Rubber Plant

two other indigenous plants, "tausagiz and "vatochniki."

It is now generally agreed, however, that the "kok-sagiz" plant, which Soviet botanists declare was unknown until 1932, promises greater practical results than all others combined. Cultivation of this plant has now been extended to plantations and collective farms in ten widely separated districts, from Central Asia to the European border, from the Black Sea coast to Moscow province.

Botanists assert that recent improvements in this plant will make it possible in two or three years to gather as much as 80 kilograms of rubber from an acre, which will accommodate 200,000 plants. Several collective farms which planted a few acres of kok-sagiz in the autumn of 1931 reported that they averaged profits of 400 rubles per acre in 1935, which exceeds profits on other crops.

Satisfied that the kok-sagiz plant will soon provide the Soviet Union with the necessary supplies of raw rubber more economically than any other source, the Commissariats of Agriculture and State Farms have arranged to extend its cultivation rapidly, both on state and collective farms and upon separate plantations located close to rubber manufacturing industries. Soviet officials are confident that within a few years each Soviet republic will have its own large rubber plantations and that these will provide all the necessary raw material for the Soviet rubber industry.

Meanwhile, however, the manufacture of synthetic rubber is being rapidly extended to make certain that Soviet industry, and particularly the military industries, will be assured of an ample supply of rubber in the event of war. Such production is expensive, and may be entirely superseded in a few years, but Soviet leaders, like those of Germany and some other countries, believe that the cost is justified because of war dangers.

Pekin Man Widens Evolution Clues

men have been unearthed that include the remains of children, both male and female, and also of men and women. The largest find is the brain case discovered on Dec. 4, 1929. This is declared to have belonged to a male about 9 years old.

On these rather meager finds anthropologists have been able to identify and classify the remains as belonging to an entirely new and different type from those found in Java, Rhodesia and in Europe. The statement, however, that the Chou Kou Tein finds were definitely a new type was now accepted without reservation by the entire anthropological world, as certain experts refused to recognize the discovery and insisted that the Sinanthropus Pakinens's was a Neanderthal type.

In this connection it might be mentioned that the capacity of the average skull found at Chou Kou Tien is about 1,000 cubic centimeters, while the average capacity of the Neanderthal skulls now in the hands of the scientists is about 1,450 cubic centimeters. This fact alone places the Sinanthropus Pekinensis in a different category—a category distinctly closer to that of the apes than that of the Neanderthal Man.

Since 1915, when visited by the Swedish geologist Andersson, the mountains around Chou Kou Tein have bei recognized as rich deposits of fossilized bones. In 1926 the first discovery of any real importance was made when two teeth with certain human characteristics were unearthed. Excavations were continued and have been followed by the discovery of the fossilized parts of skulls and jawbones that led to the discovery of the Pekin Man.

Recognizing the importance of these discoveries in determining the evolution of man and human culture the Rockefeller Foundation made a grant so that the work in anthropological science could be carried on. Today at Chou Kou Tien the work of excavation is still going on under the direction of three Chinese field assistants. About 100 Chinese workmen are engaged in slowly breaking down the side of the Lung Kou Shan (literally, Dragon Bone Mountain) or Fossil Mountain.

Dynamite Used on Mountain

In places where the rocky mountain side refuses to yield to the pressure of picks and crowbars dynamite is used, although this may result in the damage of buried specimens. Large boulders and rocks are carefully broken by sledges and every fragment examined for fossils before the rubble is carried away. Other workmen are engaged in sifting the soil.

Besides yielding the remains of the Pekin Man these careful operations have revealed the fossilized bones of numerous prehistoric animals including deer, rodents, apes, hyenas and rhinoceroses. All finds are carefully catalogued as to the depth and the nature of the strata they were found in and then are brought to Peiping. In Peiping further selection is made and all human fossils are sent to the Peiping Union Medical College's laboratories.

There, under the direction of Professor Weidenreich, the human bones are cleaned, repaired and further classified and catalogued. In the cases where fossilized remains are found embedded in the limestone rocks the rocky materials are removed by assistants using hacksaws, files and drills and other implements.

Bone Taken From Rock

In the case of the discovery of the brain case of the 9-year-old male child, it was possible to remove the fossilized bone from the rock rather than the rock from the bone. Later the fragments of the skull were reassembled, leaving the complete brain case and an exact rocky mold.

The discovery of Sinanthropus Pekinensis and the further discovery that this prehistoric man was not a stranger to the use of fire and implements definitely sets back the time when man first began to make use of outside elements and objects for his own use. The actual age of Sinanthropus Pekinensis can only be estimated, and these estimates range from 500,000 to 1,000,000 years. It is definitely known, however, that the Pekin Maru lived in the first stages of the Ice Age, and this statement is supported by two facts:

1. The rocky stratum in which the Pekin Man has been found is the same as that found under the loess formations of China. And as the loess was deposited during and toward the end of the Ice Age the approximate period of the Pekin Man can be established.

2. The animal fossils found in the Chou Kou Tien excavation with the fossils of Sinanthropus Pekinensis are of the same age and belong to the same families as those found in other parts of China, which are known to have been living before the loess was deposited.

One of the many problems confronting the anthropologists working on Sinanthropus Pekinensis is the complete absence of other parts of the skeletons, except the parts of the skulls and jawbones already discovered. In other words, why have the skulls been preserved and no trace found of the other bones?

Do the fossilized bones discovered at Chou Kou Tien represent all that remains of some grisly cannibalistic feast? Or are they the heads of enemies used in some ceremony before a grotesquely grinning god? Or are they the remains of unhappy humans dragged to the caves by some ferocious prehistoric animal? Such questions will remain as excellent items of imaginative speculation until further discoveries of the missing bones are made.

622-Pound Swordfish Sets New Panama Mark

A new record for Panama's famous Perlas Island fishing grounds was made recently by George F. Baker Jr., son of a New York banker, when he landed a black marlin swordfish weighing 622 pounds.

Baker said after the fish struck it ran out 300 yards of line before his next heartbeat, then leaped clear of the water eight times and took 500 yards more of line, according to the New York Times. After a forty-minute fight the giant fish finally was landed.

Dual Cuban Regime Denied By Batista

to use the university as revolutionary headquarters and to store dynamite bombs and ammunition there."

Although labor unions which, he said, were under Communist and revolutionary leadership, were dissolved after the revolutionary general strikes of 1934 and 1935, he asserted they have since been permitted to reorganize and are now functioning throughout the island.

He declared that the suspension of constitutional guarantees such as those of free press, free speech and free assembly, and finally the complete suspension of all constitutional law last year, were necessary in order to prevent anarchy.

"The year 1933 was a tragedy which had to be followed by emergency measures," he said. "But since the restoration of constitutional government there has been no interference with constitutional guarantees. The press prints freely what it wants, Opposition papers are published, there is nothing to stop people gathering in public if they are orderly, and all that is necessary to hold a public meeting is to get the necessary permit, the same as in other countries."

Favors Democratic System

Regarding his own political views, Colonel Batista denied that he has been preparing the ground for a sort of military fascism.

"No one can establsh either fascism or communism in Cuba," he said. "They cannot live here. I believe Cuba should have a renovated democracy, under which there should be discipline of the masses and of institutions so that we can establish a progressive State under which the masses may be taught a new idea of democracy and learn to discipline themselves. I believe in a philosophy of authority, not of force."

Colonel Batista said that he himself could be described as a "progressive Socialist."

"There are two kinds of socialism," he added. "One means anarchy, and the other functions under the discipline of the government. We must go slowly here. Government ownership may work later on in Cuba, but not now. One must be realistic."

Replying to criticisms that the army is now larger than in the Machado regime and consumes more of the national budget, he said that it could not be reduced in size because it was needed to maintain order, but that its share of the government's income, both in an absolute and a relative sense, had been somewhat reduced in the budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

"Moreover," he said, "I believe that we should use half of the army and its budget in peaceful times to help the social services of the country, which have been neglected by all previous governments. The army wants to aid in the moral and social regeneration of the Cuban people, and to improve education, sanitation and hospitals. We have already opened many primary schools in remote sections where civil teachers could not undergo the poor living conditions."

Opposes Utopian Ideas

He said that the army wanted to teach the children practical ideas and a "spirit of realism." In earlier generations, he said, too many children had been allowed to remain illiterate or to grow up with "impractical ideas."

"For one thing," he added, "we want to teach the masses that capital and labor both are necessary and should cooperate. We want to drive out utopian ideas which will not work, but which so many of our people hold."

Beginning with the elementary three r's, he said, the army intends to proceed to instruction in sanitation and hygiene, and finally to a system of agricultural education which will enable the rural population to use its natural resources profitably instead of flocking to the cities to starve or live precariously.

Colonel Batista said that he favored an immediate amnesty with full guarantees for all political prisoners and exiles, except those convicted of terrorism, gangsterism and other crimes against life and property. He hoped the students would return to the university and confine themselves to their studies so that it could be reopened this Fall. The revolutionary groups would be free to organize as political parties if they kept their opposition within constitutional limits.

He said that he was in favor of a constitutional convention to draft a new Constitution, and that he believed one could be held peacefully with the participation of the revolutionary parties if they refrained from efforts to overthrow the government.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - - - by Ripley

Reich Vs. Soviet Main Obstacle To New Pact

Germany is asked to lie down like a lamb with Russia. One of Hitler's pet hates is Bolshevism, and Captain Anthony Eden, British Foreign Secretary, is an optimist indeed to expect Hitler to eat all his Russian words. But Eden can see no harm in asking.

If Hitler assents to a new Locarno pact but follows this by rejecting any treaty of friendship and non-aggression with Russia, the British government will be placed in an embarrassing position with His Majesty's loyal opposition in Parliament. Major Clement R. Attlee, Labor party leader, and other opposition leaders profess to see through Hitler's strategy already. They assert that he wants to smoke the pipe of peace with Great Britain, France and Belgium, so that, with nothing to bother him from that side, he will be free to make war in the east against Russia, Czechoslovakia or whatever other nation blocks Germanic expansion.

Separate Peace Assailed

British Socialists, in common with Continental Socialists, maintain that Hitler should not be permitted to buy off Western Europe at the expense of Eastern Europe. The Socialist idea is that "peace is indivisible," and that Germany should keep peace with all her neighbors or none.

Unwilling to offend powerful Germany at this critical time, the British government reluctantly consented to this week's conference only because France insisted that a "get together" of France, Belgium and Great Britain might be beneficial in reminding Germany that a false move on her part would revive the World War front. Having gone thus far to satisfy France, Great Britain took the sting out of the meeting by adopting a harmless communique which invited Germany and Italy to a real conference as soon as possible.

The only punch in the communique was the paragraph declaring nothing would be more fatal to peace than "the division, apparent or real, of Europe into opposing blocs"—in other words, the pre-war Triple Alliance versus the Triple Entente.

Still Wooing Il Duce

The recent Austro-German settlement with Premier Benito Mussolini's approval aroused fears here that Germany, Italy and Austria were returning to the Triple Alliance shattered by the World War. However, British officials have not abandoned hope that Mussolini may be won back to cooperation with Great Britain and France.

A further step to appease Mussolini will be announced soon, perhaps next Monday in a foreign affairs debate in the House of Commons. Not satisfied with the lifting of sanctions, Il Duce has made it plain that he wants Great Britain to cancel the naval assistance arrangement in the Mediterranean with Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey. Eden is preparing to do this, not because of love for Mussolini, but because Great Britain, as the saying goes, does not want to drive Italy into the arms of Germany.

France Shows Off New Power In Air

Large Crowds At Le Bourget See Military Planes Stage Spectacular Display

France opened the three-day celebration of her national holiday, Bastile Day, with a great display of military aviation at Le Bourget Field.

Although the skies were overcast with frequent showers, large crowds remained at the field throughout the day, intensely interested in one of the few occasions the public has had to measure the skill and the excellence of the French military pilots, says the New York Times.

Military aviation fields in general are located at centers not easily accessible. The planes that took part in the ceremonies flew in formation from Villacoublay and other remote headquarters, visited only by special permission.

The day's exhibition permitted spectators to realize fully the progress made in recent years in modernizing French aviation.

Only a few years ago France was obliged to admit having been surpassed in the air by several other nations. It was this realization by the air authorities that caused a complete revision in construction and a general improvement in French models of every kind.

Many new model planes performed singly and in groups at Le Bourget. Big tri-motored bombing planes were seen reaching a speed of 300 kilometers an hour (approximately 190 m.p. h.) and a new type of pursuit pane, of exceptionally racy design, performed extraordinary feats of acrobatics. It also developed a speed of 500 kilometers (approximately 310 miles) an hour during tests.

In the afternoon there were demonstrations of gliders and parachute jumps—sports hitherto little practiced in France, which met with great success. There were stunts by famous pilots and the display was concluded with a mass flying exhibition in which 200 planes of various types participated.

Problems Of Peace And Security Surveyed

proved in the case of Italy, would not appear to be worth the trouble and expense.

The covenant must be regarded as a whole; and therefore Article XVI depends on Article VIII (disarmament). A world disarmed to a minimum is a much safer place for Article XVI than a world armed to its teeth. Along with plans for peaceful change and regional agreements for the complete application of Article XVI it is, therefore, indispensable to prepare plans for universal disarmament.

New Practices

New practices should be insisted upon with regard to Article XI. Under it nearly every political question of any importance might be the object of League work. The calm and indifference with which the Council of the League, as a collegiate body, looks on Danubian affairs, despite the fact that the second paragraph of Article XI would amply suffice to justify its intervention in them ere it is too late, is a convenient example of the lax way in which the covenant is interpreted under that "prudence" which the new diplomacy has inherited from the old.

The Council should consider itself as continuously and permanently responsible for what is going on in the international world, just as do governments in the national sphere. Instead of the rather bureaucratic tasks among the several members of the Council there should be a distribution of areas of the world for them to watch, with the help of an adequately prepared Secretariat. Conflicts would thus be dealt with in a nascent state, when it would still be possible to handle them without being exposed to explosions. Incidentally, this practice would remove much of what still lingers of the old Talleyrand-Metternich school of diplomacy in the very corridors of the League.

And no change in the covenant? No, sir. The covenant is a perfectly good instrument. It is badly played, that is all. And the music is not good enough.

PWA Schools Add Rooms For 131,231

More Than 200 New Buildings Have Been Erected In N.Y. In Past 3 Years

More than 3,180 classrooms and accommodations for 131,231 students have been added to public school facilities in New York State by the PWA, it was revealed recently by Arthur S. Tuttle, State PWA director, in a report to Administrator Harold L. Ickes.

The report showed that in the past three years, when school construction was lagging, New York communities received the aid of the PWA for more than 200 new school buildings. In addition twenty-four schools are being renovated and repaired with PWA funds, according to the New York Times.

"School construction has been one of the major accomplishments of the Public Works program," Mr. Tuttle said. "PWA has favored allotments for schools because such projects rank among the best public works from the standpoint of social desirability. Aside from usefulness, the construction of such projects has created a vast amount of employment, both at the site of the buildings and in the scores of industries which furnish the materials and supplies."

Projects Worth $79,000,000

Mr. Tuttle's report took into account only school construction that resulted from PWA loans and grants totaling $56,309,740, which will result in projects valued at nearly ¥79,000,000. In every instance the local community bears the major proportion of the cost. The grant under the 1935 Emergency Relief Act is 45 per cent of the cost of construction.

Most of the loans and grants were for new high and elementary school buildings. New facilities were provided for 61,965 elementary school pupils in 1,499 new classrooms, and 1,323 new high school classrooms provide for 53,729 more students. And additional 15,537 students will be taken care of in 358 new classrooms provided in combinel elementary and high school buildings.

New facilities provided include auditoriums, which also are available as community centers, gymnasiums, cafeterias, libraries and laboratories. These facilities, furnished with the latest equipment, will give New Pork State an educational plant second to none, Mr. Tuttle said.

Mayor Seeks New Loan

Further WPA assistance in the city's new school program is requested in an application for funds which Mayor La Guardia has made to Washington, it was announced recently. The Mayor is asking for $3,167,000 for construction of two new schools and additions to two existing schools.

One of the two new buildings would be for P. S. 62, on East 128th Street in Harlem. This is the first of two new schools recently authorized for the Harlem section. Its estimated cost is $1,525,000.

The other new school is to be known as P. S. 108 and will be located at Neill, Yates and Hering Avenues in the Bronx. Its estimated cost is $500,000. The new additions are for two Brooklyn schools, P. S. 131, Fort Hamilton Avenue and Forty-third Street, $651,000, and P. S. 169, at Seventh Avenue and Forty-third Street, $491,00.

Long Term Contract For Edith Fellows

Aided and abetted by Columbia, young Miss Edith Fellows, who has a habit of stealing pictures, is apparently going to have further opportunities of developing this trait, as she was placed under a new long-term contract by the company recently.

This nine year old trouper, veteran of a hundred pictures, shared the limelight with Claudette Colbert in Columbia's "She Married Her Boss" and later appeared in the company's "One Way Ticket" and also in "And So They Were Married."

Canadian Pact Irks Northwest And Aids Landon

Republican Party Officials Tell Hamilton People In Area Swinging To G.O.P.

Two visitors at Republican national headquarters in Chicago, Ill., on July 27 outlined to John Hamilton, national chairman, issues which they declared were swinging sentiment to Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas in two widely separated regions, J. N. Emerson of Seattle, state chairman of Washington, reported that in the Pacific northwest, agriculture and lumbering are losing their old markets to Canadian competitors under the reciprocal trade agreements.

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan asserted that carpet bag government of his state by Washington burocrats has vexed Democrats and Republicans alike, says the Chicago Tribune whose report of July 28 continues: He said the New Deal might as well strike out "the Star Spangled Banner" and put in "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here" as national anthem.

Foreign Grains Pour In

"Wheat farmers in the northwest Pacific coast district have at least 12 million bushels of unmillable wheat on hand for which there is no immediate market," said Mr. Emerson. It is suitable for live stock feeding, but when shipping is required to middle west points it cannot compete with Canadian wheat which comes in under a 10 per cent ad valorem tariff.

"We are also confronted with competition from Argentine corn. This has about driven middle western corn off our market.

"Concessions made to Canada on lumber have created havoc with our forest products industry.

"Dutch bulbs, affected by the agreement with Holland, are driving our bulbs off the market. Since the Cleveland convention a strong Republican tide has set in throughout the Pacific northwest."

"Civil Service Order a Sham"

Senator Vandenberg, who was on his way to Topeka to talk with Gov. Landon, said he is to open his speaking tour for the ticket on August 6 in Chicago at the Union League club. Commenting on President Roosevelt's recent order placing additional postmasterships under civil service by executive order, he termed it "an act of hypocrisy."

"It means the Farley gang gets a life tenure," he said. "I haven't any doubt they will extend the same kind of civil service to the WPA.

"If the President makes many more mistakes like his last civil service executive order, the American people will have such a frank picture of spoilsmanship that I fail to see how the verdict can be anything but adverse.

Fixes Things for Appointees

"He issued the order under the pretext of civil service but at the bottom was a paragraph stating every incumbent postmaster shall continue to hold office on a noncompetitive basis.

"If the average age of postmasters is now 50 and life expectancy is 70, it means Farley's boys will have twenty years to hold on to their jobs, and that civil serve in the postoffice department will not get there until 1956. It's the antithesis of civil service.

"Michigan looks very good for the Republican party. The Republicans are effectively united and the Democrats are very effectively disunited. Certain sections of the Democratic party are objecting strenuously to the carpet bag government and dictatorship emanating from Washington."

The Michigan senator is to be billed for an extensive speech making tour.

After a conference with Chairman Hamilton, Mrs. V. E. Stenerson, Republican national committeewoman from North Dakota said:

"Lemke on a third party ticket will do very well in North Dakota which is his home state, but Gov. Landon will carry the state."

Hamilton Goes to Indianapolis

Mr. Hamilton departed last night to confer in Indianapolis with Indiana's national committeeman, George A. Ball of Muncie; Mrs. Grace B. Reynolds of Cambridge City, and other state leaders.

A luncheon for him is to be held today by the state central committee, which has invited the 184 county chairmen and vice chairmen. Mr. Hamilton will speak tonight at a dinner of the Republican Editorial Association of Indiana. He is to return to Chicago tomorrow.

Pedals 450 Miles For Summer Skating

Harris Legge, 24, of Galt, Ont., Canada, ought to have strong legs for figure skating, says the Christian Science Monitor.

He arrived in Lake Placid, New York State, for the opening of the midsummer ice season after pedaling his bicycle 450 miles from his Canadian home.

(Bill) Nye, formerly attached to the state department, has been appointed as personal aid to Gov. Landon. He is to be with the candidate during the campaign and will be in charge of transportation on trips.

20,000 Veterans Bow At Verdun In Oath For 'Peace Of The World'

On the battlefield of Verdun on July 12, Peace Pilgrims of fourteen nations held communion with the dead. Some say 20,000 former soldiers were there, some say 30,000. It matters little. Had thrice as many come they would still have been outnumbered by the dead.

That is the deeper meaning of the pilgrimage; that and the fact that there were 500 Germans among the French on this occasion, the first on which they have fraternized on French soil, says G. H. Archambault in the New York Times. His despatch from Verdun on July 12, continues:

The ceremony had been organized by the French Veterans Confederation. This organization is distinct from the National Union of Veterans and its leans toward pacifism in politics. The Blum Government therefore shared in the expenses to the extent of 3,000,000 francs. But politics played no part in the ceremony. The demeanor of the pilgrims showed that any politics would have been out of place and that they, at any rate, scorned propaganda.

These former soldiers of Verdum came on a mission of deep earnestness. When men in middle age sacrifice two days' leisure to ride 150 miles in jolting buses, eat only cold meals by the roadside, curtail their sleep and accept straw beds in improvised billets, it is evident that they have a purpose. In this case the purpose was to testify for peace.

The method of testifying was to go from Verdun to the Douaumont Ossuary in a mute and measured march, stand silently at the graves of fallen comrades and then with arms stretched out swear individually an oath of peace.

In this ceremony there joined with the French the following nations: Germany and Austria, among the former enemies; the United States (represented by a group from the American Legion post in Paris), Great Britain, Italy (though she has shunned other international demonstrations), Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Greece, Portugal, Belgium, Rumania and Denmark. Hungary and Bulgaria did not attend, but they sent cordial messages.

There were no speeches; they also would have been out of place. Men who have been under fire have reached such a climax of experience and emotion that mere words cannot recall it. But there was a tolling of bells and dirges in bands and minute guns and bugle calls long drawn out. And each participant in turn raised his voice to say:

"This is for the peace of the world."

On the eastern marshes of France nature appears ever in her most severe mood. Many soldiers of Verdun felt that there always was more shadow than light there. Twenty years have passed and the seared earth has grown green again. Yet an indefiniable feeling of menace remains beyond the last of the rolling hills.

When one comes to Verdun from the German side the sensation is the same. It was in an endeavor to dispel these shadows that the Peace Pilgrims each swore tonight the oath of peace. Tomorrow at noon they will repeat it collectively.

Island Chiefs Dictators In South Sea Islands

fights his first day in office. Since then there has been harmony. Now natives jump at his word. Copra production trebled. The Governor taught natives how to plant and raise castor beans. All the islanders share in this new richness. A clean little hospital now stands on an airy hill. Natives, catching the germ of the new prosperity, have built roads, put new thatch of pandanus on their decaying houses, drink "kava" but seldom. The chiefs of Uea are back in flower, holding the respect of their people again.

The American Naval Governor, presiding over the annual "fono" of the district chiefs, listens to the usually intelligent but often childish suggestions of the council. He weighs the problem—is it good or bad for the native?—and returns a verdict. The characteristic Samoan childishness comes out in almost every bill before the "fono." This year, for instance, the requests to the Governor included these amusing resolutions: "That a two-lane highway of concrete be built around Swiss-Alp-like Tutuila Island; that all chiefs' salaries be increased by twice and that all Navy officials' salaries be slashed; that the monthly beetle catching day in which all natives take part be abolished (this is a Naval ordinance to fight a cocoanut blight); that all chiefs be retired at a reasonable age on full pay pensions!"

Pride of Samoa and envy of all the South Seas are the Fita Fita Guards, colorful military corps composed of the best of Samoan youth. Thursday sunset parade on the Tutuila Naval station cricket field (Samoans play cricket incessantly) is a sight to turn a West Point drill sergeant's eye bright green.

Drilled by a United States Marine officer, the "lava lava" clad Fita is massive in body, straight as the ramrod, and proud of his job.

Formed many years ago to man the Navy staton ship at Pago Pago, this bright little army of Samoa were found to be poor sailors! So the Governor placed them ashore, built barracks for them, made them the police of the island. An American bandmaster came down to Samoa. The Fita Band came into being. In the evening parades they lead the march. At other times one hears them through the palms near Government House where they serenade the Governor and his wife three or four evenings weekly.

The uniform of the Fita would be hard to match outside Samoa. A crownlike red turban sets on the top of his head. A short-sleeved white shirt with blue chevrons, a wide, red sash and a knee-length "lava lava" of navy blue with red and white stripes complete the outfit. His feet, usually reminiscent of King Kong, are always bare.

Every chief in the island hopes his son will be taken into the Fita Fita Guard. Every little native boy who comes to watch them parade looks forward to the day when he may try for a place in the line.

From the rather cosmopolitan chief one sees in Tahiti to the chap with the discarded cigarette tin stuck through a hole in his nose in the Solomons, missionary work and outside education are helping him to keep abreast of his times.

Samoan Chief Speaks English

The stock gag of the cartoonist wherein explorers find a South Sea chief on a desert island speaking with an Oxford or Harvard accent really is not funny. Chief Tufele, District Governor of the Island of Manua in Samoa was sent to Hawaii to college. He speaks English with no trace of his ancient accent. He passed years away from Samoa yet today he lives in a grass house teaching his people to retain all things Samoan, to be proud of their race.

One evening at Government House, several important chiefs were invited to dinner. Tufele arrived clad in stiff shirt, pointed collar, black tie, white mess jacket, black silk sash, a black satin lava lava and bare feet! It was a striking costume, but it proved the point that many debunkers of this beautiful South Sea would not have you believe—that the "savages" of this part of the world do not care a rap for civilization. They prefer their own foods, are ill at ease with knife and fork even after years of practice. They appreciate the thought and work of the Navy or whoever may be governing them, but for themselves, raw fish, cocoanut miti haarii, taro, the siva sva dance, the fishing on the reef! They would rather have all that than all the tinned salmon and canned phonograph music and high powered motor cars on earth.

Don't worry, that romantic thought of the South Sea chief of old in your mind need never be replaced by one of him wearing trade store clothes and riding in a trade store car. The South Sea chief has been here a long time and it is more than likely he'll be watching his people dance for a long time to come.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Keeley Cure

During the year 1935, the Keeley Institute of Dwight, Ills., made a careful survey covering the background and occupations of the 782 patients treated for the disease of alcoholism during the entire year. Of this number only one was a saloonkeeper. There were 92 farmers, 90 salesmen, 68 merchants, 19 physicians, 15 druggists, 57 unemployed, 28 office clerks, 10 butchers, 8 bankers, 7 bookkeepers, 11 brokers, 8 advertising men, 13 engineers, 9 dentists, 8 newspaper men, 15 government employes, 18 insurance agents, 27 lawyers, 35 manufacturers, 34 mechanics, 13 railroad men, 12 dairymen, 13 executives, and other occupations ranging from one to ten in number. The one profession seldom represented is acting, Keeley having treated but three actors in the past five years.

Social and Personal Notes

COLOR PRINT EXHIBITION

Mr. Paul Jacoulet will open a three-day exhibition of his color prints Thursday at the Karuizawa Shu-Kaidō or Karuizawa hall. He will exhibit about 37 prints, among which will be his well known prints of a Korean baby, an old Japanese woman, a man of the Celebes, a Chinese lady, and "The Shell Boy." Drawings of flowers will also be included.

In the autumn, Mr. Jacoulet intends to hold six big exhibitions, in: Nagoya, Kyoto, Osaka, Kobe, Seoul, and possibly in Manchoukuo.

GOING TO AMERICA

Mr. Katsuzo Nishi, inventor of the Nishi-style health promoting method, will leave Yokohama for San Francisco aboard the S.S. Tatsuta Maru on August 21. During his stay in America, Mr. Nishi will give a lecture and demonstration on the method in various parts of that country. He is expected to return home next fall.

Lion Fights Tiger

A free fight between a full-grown lion and a tiger took place in Agortala Zoo (Bengal).

The connecting door between the two cages was left open by a careless cleaner, and the tiger at once went through and charged the lion.

The lion won easily, tearing his enemy to pieces.

British Factories Rush Fast Planes

Defense Craft With Speed Of Over 300 Miles An Hour Enter Mass Production

Swarms of pursuit planes, able to fly at far more than 300 miles an hour, are being turned out regularly now to defend the crowded cities and workshops of Great Britain against attack from the air, says Ferdinand Kuhn Jr. in a recent dispatch from London to the New York Times.

This was revealed in the House of Commons by Sir Thomas Inskip, Minister for the Coordination of Defense, in a speech which showed the gigantic engine of British rearmament was gaining momentum and moving faster every hour, according to the article which follows:

"The speed of the machines in production today for regular use in the Air Force would five years ago have made them serious competitors for the Schneider Cup," said Sir Thomas, recalling that the winner of the Schneider Cup contest in 1931 reached a speed of 340 miles an hour.

"These are not specimens but machines in regular orderly production for everyday use by the Air Force. They are in orderly delivery and they will be delivered in ever-increasing numbers.

"It would not be proper for me to disclose any facts or figures regarding other powers' production, but it is the government's plain duty to make and carry out a program to match the expansion of any foreign air force whatever it may be."

Vast German Outlay Admitted

Sir Thomas's challenge would have been more impressive but for the official admission that Germany had spent about $4,000,000,000 on warlike preparations last year and probably was spending an equal amount this year. This colossal figure—first produced by Winston Churchill last Spring in the face of official skepticism—is equal to the entire British budget for the present year, including the housing, education and unemployment expenditures as well as the outlay on defense.

Mr. Churchill asked Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, to say whether the figure was correct if one included the cost of German strategic roads.

"The government has no official figures," Mr. Chamberlain replied, "but from such information as it has I see no reason to think the figure mentioned is necessarily excessive although there are elements of conjecture."

These were not the words of a wild alarmist, but of the cold, cautious Chancellor of the Exchequer, who is accustomed to weighing every word before he speaks. It was the British Government's admission that these unheard of sums were being spent across the North Sea and—by inference—that Britain was far behind in her preparations.

The shock was deepened later when Mr. Churchill declared that Germany was spending six times as much as Britain on increased armaments.

Warns of British Lagging

"Everybody is going away for the holidays soon," said Mr. Churchill gravely. "When we come back we shall be looking forward to the coronation. Do not forget that all the time those remorseless hammers are descending day and night and that the Germans—the most warlike and in many ways the most efficient people in Europe—are becoming welded into a tremendous fighting machine, equipped with the most fearful agencies of modern science.

"As far as this year is concerned, and I fear also as far as the next, we shall not overtake them on the land and in the air, but will fall further behind. In these circumstances we have the right to say that conditions of emergency have supervened.

"I do not ask that war conditions should be established for the production of munitions. All I ask is that a state of emergency preparation should be proclaimed, that the whole spirit and atmosphere of our rearmament should be raised to a higher pitch and that we should lay aside a good deal of the comfort and smoothness of our ordinary life in the face of the evergrowing dangers that gather around us."

Government spokesmen made it plain that they intend to do nothing of the sort. They still believe they can rearm Britain without interfering with normal trade and industry. But despite Mr. Churchill's warnings they asserted today that the British giant had awakened from his long sleep and would soon produce results that would astonish the world.

Progress in a Few Weeks

Since the Commons last discussed rearmament a few weeks ago Britain's progress has been striking. Fifty-two factories have just been offered contracts, according to Coordination Minister Inskip, for making ammunition on a huge scale. The machine tool industry is working to the utmost of its swiftly expanding capacity and its imports have been doubled to make up for the temporary inadequacy of its output.

Moreover, the geographical layout of Britain's defense is becoming less vulnerable. The government shell factory at Woolwich—part of London's great Thames arsenal—is being moved to safer sites in Lancashire, Scotland and South Wales. Sir Thomas promised no time wood be lost in erecting the necessary buildings.

Factories are being revived and reequipped in Hereford and Nottingham for the production of war material. Emergency reserves of essential raw materials and food have been decided upon. Plans are almost completed for diverting merchant ships to less exposed ports and distributing their cargoes.

Rebuilding of the navy is going on so fast, said Sir Thomas, that "I am not aware of any anxiety in any quarter of the house as to the naval position." Maintenance and replacement are proceeding normally, he said, while expansion is taking place "on a constantly growing scale."

Skilled workers are coming forward in such numbers, Sir Thomas said, that "I wish I could say the man power of the regular and territorial armies was on the whole as free from anxiety as the question of man power in connection with munition production."

Stresses Recruiting Trouble

The gloomiest part of Sir Thomas' survey was the shortage of recruits for the army. It gave him an opening for scathing references to the Labor party whose leader, Clement R. Attlee, had said recently: "I am not going to support a recruiting campaign by a government whose foreign policy I cannot approve."

"What does he mean?" boomed Sir Thomas at the Labor members sitting opposite him. "Do you mean to leave the crowded cities and centers of employment and your own homes undefended and at the mercy of an invader because your leader distrusts our foreign policy?"

"Who is the invader?" Will Thorne, a Laborite, shouted.

"You will know who the invader is when your house is bombed," Sir Thomas retorted.

The government is now asking 50-year-old men to join the territorial army, corresponding to the National Guard in the United States, for anti-aircraft defense duties, "for the simple purpose of defending their own homes and their own employment," Sir Thomas announced.

Spanish Morocco Has Fierce Tribes

Area Of 18,300 Square Miles, With Population Of 750,000, Is Often Troubled

Spanish Morocco is the smaller of the two main zones, French and Spanish, into which the Sultanate of Morocco in North Africa is divided. It covers 18,300 square miles, with a population of 750,000, whereas French Morocco has an area of 200,000 square miles and a population of more than 5,000,000.

The population consists mostly of native Mohammedans, together with 38,000 Europeans and 11,000 natives of Jewish descent, according to the latest census figures. The capital of the Spanish zone is Tetuan, a city of about 45,000 inhabitants. It is the headquarters of the Spanish High Commissioner and of the Khalifa under the Spanish protectorate.

Other principal cities are Melilla, which has a population of 37,000, and Ceuta, with 35,000 inhabitants. The city of Ceuta, which is on the Mediterranean coast opposite Gibraltar, has belonged to Spain since the sixteenth century, says the New York Times, whose article continues:

Extent of Spanish Zone

The Spanish zone includes a narrow strip of land sixty miles long, in Northern Morocco, stretching from the Atlantic Ocean nearly to the border of Algeria, which is in the French zone. South of the Spanish zone is the Sahara Desert. A second Spanish zone is at the extreme southern end of Morocco, and the third is a narrow strip of land on the Atlantic Coast.

Most of the natives belong to Berber tribes, whose ancestors conquered Spain in three wars centuries ago. These aboriginal natives inhabit the mountains and are fierce and warlike, with a history and tradition of independence and a hatred of foreign invaders. Arabs and Moors live in the lowlands. The Jewish inhabitants belong to two groups, one settled in Morocco from time immemorial, and the other driven to Africa by persecution in European countries in modern times.

Spain has done little to develop its Moroccan protectorate, especially in comparison with the late Marshall Lyautey's administration in French Morocco, which was noted for its building of highways and railroads, and its development of public works, social welfare, agriculture, public health and education. The Spanish zone has only one narrow-gauge railroad, from Ceuta to Tetuan and to Rio Martin.

At the time of the Agadir incident in 1911, when Germany challenged the extension of French influence in Morocco and a European war was narrowly averted, Spain expressed resentment over the occupation of the town of Fez by the French, following a general uprising of the Moroccan tribes. This incident brought about a treaty between France and Spain, adjusting the limits of their respective spheres of influence.

Riff Rebellion Recalled

The Sultan and most of the tribal leaders accepted the protectorates, but rebellious tribesmen continued to make trouble for many years. Finally, in 1926, the rebellion of the Riff chieftain, Abd-el-Krim, was put down by French and Spanish expeditions after much hard fighting in mountain territory. Pacification of the country was regarded as complete in 1933, when Sidi Ali Hociene, last of the rebel leaders, surrendered.

Several weeks ago there were hints in brief dispatches from French Morocco of impending political troubles in the Spanish zone. One dispatch told of three persons killed and a score wounded in clashes between strikers and Civil Guards in Ceuta, with a general strike under way, food supplies running low and Civil Guards occupying the city.

Melilla, where the military rebellion is reported to have started, is a port on the north coast, which has a citadel and a garrison of 1,000 men in normal times.

Besides the French and Spanish zones, Morocco also includes the internationalized city of Tangier, a seaport of 60,000 population on the Atlantic Coast, which is well known to tourists.

Drowned By Lightning

Lightning has drowned a peasant in the Polish village of Suchy.

He was mowing a field when the storm broke over him. Lightning struck the blade of his scythe, stunned him and hurled him into a ditch, where he was drowned in some shallow water.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Lucky 13

The Steamship "Drummond Castle" of the Castle Line, sailed from Capetown for England on May 23, 1896 with 250 souls aboard. The vessel struck on a rock near Ushant, Brittany and sank within 3 minutes, shortly before midnight on June 16, 1896. Only one passenger escaped with his life. He was Charles Marquardt, who clung to a floating spar all night until rescued by a Breton fisherman. The only surviving passenger had been the occupant of cabin No. 13 aboard the "Drummond Castle."

A Marxian Experiment

passed out to audiences at every performance, asking for comment on the funny lines, the unfunny ones and the general caliber of the performance. A clinical conference is held after each show and the old carnival axiom "Every performance new and different," for once becomes an actual fact. The four gagsmen who accompany the Marxes often sit up all night formulating fresh lines and bits of action; after a brief rehearsal the next morning the additional material is incorporated in the show. It's the sort of thing that would send a traveling prima donna into tirades of invective, but the Marx brothers seem to dote on learning and unlearning new "sides." Some gags are born in Kansas City and perish in Omaha; others possess a longevity that carries them from the Corn Belt way back to the Golden Gate.

The stateroom sequence in "A Night at the Opera," which many people thought was the funniest scene in the picture, was a matter of chance parentage. The scene was entirely different as originally written. On tour, one of the Marx brothers (all of whom contribute heavily to their own bag of jokes) suggested bringing a couple of incidental characters into the cabin to collide and drop a tray of food; the overcrowded angle followed from that, and, when a Salt Lake City audience went into gales of laughter at the result the scene was made a high light of the script.

One of the bits of persiflage that was considered particularly brilliant in the original tryout script of their last picture concerned the scene where Groucho, bound for America on an Italian liner, asked the waiter for French pastry. "But this is an Italian boat," was the haughty reply. "Well, then, what's the rate of exchange?" rejoined Groucho. The lines never evoked more than a few sad little chuckles at the preview performances, and a new piece of business was substituted: Groucho asked the waiter, "Have you got any milk-fed chicken?" The waiter replied in the affirmative and Groucho said, "Well, then, squeeze the milk out of one and bring me a glassful." Audiences howled consistently at this.

Another line that friendly advisers back at the studio said was terrible occurred in the scene between Groucho and the detective, where the latter took the star by the arm and announced, "I am a plainclothes man!" Groucho replies, "You look like an old clothes man to me." Half-heartedly the gag was kept in the tryout script, only to draw one of the biggest laughs of the show. Movie audiences reacted the same way. But even the Marxes admit that any one who looks at the line in type and then turns a shade pale about the gills would be merely experiencing a normal physiological reaction.

American Missionary Dies In Peiping

Domei

PEIPING, August 2—Mrs. Ada Mateer, of the American Presbyterian Mission, died here at the age of 86.

Mrs. Mateer spent 57 years in the missionary service in China, mostly in Peiping. A native of Massachusetts and a relative of the late Ralph Waldo Emerson, the famous American poet, she went through the Boxer siege, taking care of thirty of her students for many years after the siege.

Deceased was a fine Chinese scholar and had translated a number of English books into Chinese.

Expedition Uses Fords In Difficult Ascent In Utah

Rouge Plant Power House Now Largest High-Pressure Steam Unit In World

By driving automobiles over a trail in southeastern Utah which had never before been traversed by motor cars under their own power, members of the Rainbow Bridge-Monument Valley Scientific Expedition, centering their work this summer in the Navajo Indian Reservation in the Southwestern United States, prove there is pioneering yet to be performed in motor vehicle travel in America.

One of the expedition's projects is the scientific exploration of canyons of the San Juan River, a portion of which runs through southeastern Utah. To launch the exploration fleet on the stream, passengers, supplies and specially-built collapsible boats were transported down a precipitous grade known as Noki Mountain, through deep-gorged Noki Canyon to the river and back again to the crest of Noki Mountain, says a report from Dearborn, Mich.

Five automobiles had descended Noki Mountain and climbed it prior to the expedition's feat, but they were assisted in the climb by block and tackle. A part of the expedition's motor caravan, two 1936 Ford V-8 station wagons and a V-8 truck, added a new chapter to motoring history in the Monument Valley region when they descended and climbed Noki Mountain under their own power. Moreover, the ascent was made after dark.

Dangerous Climb

Climbing Noki, it is said, is dangerous as well as difficult. The path, covered with loose stones and gravel, describes an abrupt hairpin turn. There are high stone walls banking the inner side of the trail and a 100-foot drop on the outer side. At some points the trail is so narrow that rock had to be chopped away to permit passage of the truck platform.

A route to Noki Mountain was carved for the three Ford vehicles by Ben Wetherill, widely-known native of the Monument Valley region, staff assistant of the Expedition. Much of his route lay over the rock bottoms of dry washes, and some of it through mazes of desert vegetation, some nearly as high as the station wagons. There was one 160-degree turn which necessitated double backing, and there were spots where the car wheels were required to climb natural stairs of 18-inch steps.

The Monument Valley area, in which the expedition is carrying on investigations to add to the scientific knowledge of the Southwest's prehistoric cultures, is totally unlike any other part of the country. Its numerous canyons hide relics of the ancient Pueblo Indians which provide one of the principal studies of the Expedition. Its sandstone mesas buttes and monoliths, brilliantly colored in the changing light, present views some have likened to those which they might expect to see on a visit to the moon.

Biggest In World

Spinning a Ford V-8 steering wheel, Henry Ford recently started the steam flowing through a new turbine generator that makes the giant power house of the Rouge Plant the largest high-pressure steam generating installation in the world. The new equipment which includes a 1,400-pound pressure boiler increases generating capacity from 200,000 to 326,000 horsepower. The installation is the first in the world to use all-welded pipe. The new generating equipment represents an investment of about $4,600,000.

Setting another record in another respect, the new installation provides for the operation of the new boiler at the highest temperature ever achieved in a large industrial plant in the United States. The boiler will provide steam at 900 degrees Fahrenheit, supplying 900,000 pounds an hour at that temperature. This achievement greatly increases efficiency, according to engineers. The new boiler is 25 feet 8 inches by 32 feet and towers 115 feet, the full height of the power house.

To bring the steam to the 900 degrees temperature, the boiler is fired with pulverized coal at the rate of about 40 tons an hour together with large amounts of blast furnace gas. Designed to produce steam at 1,400 pounds pressure, the boiler will have a normal operating pressure of about 1,215 pounds at the turbine throttle. As the steam is condensed as soon as it is released from the turbine, the boiler turbo system operates on about 35,000 gallons of water.

Jewish Assembly Meets; More Trouble Feared

Domei

JERUSALEM, August 17.—With two important political conferences meeting this week, the smouldering Arab-Jewish imbroglio may break out into another series of strikes and riots despite the outward calm, it was feared here today. While the Jewish elective assembly met today, Arabs are awaiting the opening of the general conference of the Supreme Council on Thursday night, in which measures will be taken to contest British handling of the Jewish immigration problem.

In view of the present crisis, 70 members of the Jewish elective assembly met in secret session today to decide their attitude toward the British policy in the Holy Land. Jewish leaders declared that the policy of the British, despite previous commitments of Anglo-Jewish friendship, is leaning towards the Arabs.

The assembly is determined to oppose any restrictions or interruptions in Jewish immigration to the Holy Land since it is rightfully their fatherland. Moreover, it is stated, the return of Jews to Palestine is necessary owing to the anti-Semitic policies of various countries in Europe, mainly Germany.

Argentina Replies To Uruguayan Proposal

Domei

BUENOS AIRES, August 17.—Replying to the Uruguayan Government's circular note suggesting mediation by the American powers in the current civil war in Spain, Dr. C. Saavedra Lamas, Argentine foreign minister, today welcomed the suggestion as "characteristic of the generosity of the Uruguayan people," but indicated that his government favors a policy of watchful waiting.

Equally as cool, it is reported here, is the American government's reaction to the Uruguayan proposal. However, Undersecretary William Phillips promised Mr. J. Richling, Uruguayan minister to Washington,

Women's Drive Asks Venezuela To Grant Rights

Equality In Political And Property Status Sought By Revivified Campaign

The women of Venezuela have intensified their campaign for economic freedom, a "place in the world" and equality with men since the death last December of Juan Vincente Gomez, dictator for twenty-seven years. Women in Venezuela have no political rights, and their property rights are vested in their husbands. As soon as a girl is married her husband may take her money, if he wishes, under the law.

In the rural districts, after a wedding, a peon rides home from the ceremony on his burro, and the bride follows on foot. She works in the field and does other manual labor, says the New York Herald Tribune, whose report continues: The more highly placed women, of course, do not walk from their weddings behind a donkey, and they do not till the soil, but they feel their lot is hard, nevertheless.

The women's campaign platform says their object is "to abolish womanhood as a mere object of luxury, of pleasure, of indifference, and free her from the economic yoke; to make her conscious of herself and efficient."

The suffragists are organizing throughout the country, and a men's society known as Orve, with 30,000 members, recently took up the cudgel for them. A feminine group has been added to this body, and Senora Anna Julia Rojas, a prominent Venezuelan who long was a resident of Long Island, N. Y., is secretary.

One of the most active women is Senorita Carmen de Clemente Traviseso, a university graduate who in 1928 defined Gomez's troops at the time of the student troubles. She was one of the organizers in 1928 of the Federation of Students, which is playing a great part in the present revolutionary change to democracy.

As part of the suffragist drive, working women are being organized into unions to obtain higher pay. At present women get about 40 cents a day for unskilled work. The women are demanding the same pay men get.

Hull Castigates Trade Pact Critics

this act has led to a great increase in the imports, in 1935, of competitive agricultural products.

Only Four Pacts Operating in 1935

"Such statements first ignore the fact that only four trade agreements were in actual operation during any part of that year. As a result of one of these, the Cuban agreement, our export of lard to Cuba practically trebled in value, and the sales of other American agricultural products to Cuba also greatly increased. In the other three agreements in force during portions of 1935, those with Haiti, Sweden and Belgium, the United States made virtually no agricultural concessions, while, on the other hand, a very substantial list of concessions was secured for American farm product, some of them, such as those on fruits, being particularly helpful.

"Secondly, as they well know, if the increased agricultural imports in 1935 that were absolutely necessary to feed and keep alive the livestock and poultry in the drought belt should be deducted, no appreciable increase in competitive imports would be found to exist (excepting sugar, which is controlled under the generally accepted quota system).

"Nor is there the slightest basis for the absurd propagarda to the effect that the benefits obtained for our exports through trade agreements have been obtained by 'trading off' agriculture's domestic market. The marked improvement in the domestic market is itself proof to the contrary. The chief increase in agricultural imports in 1936 have been in non-competitive product such as rubber, raw silk, carpetwool, &c.

Competitive Imports Small

"Apart from the item of sugar from Cuba, which comes in under a general quota agreement to supplement our continental production, not over 3 per cent of agricultural imports, either directly or remotely competitive, can be attributed to our trade-agreement concessions. Given normal weather, even that small percentage would decline. And should the present year, unfortunately, witness a drought similar to 1934 and bring additional imports of foodstuffs over existing tariffs, these imports would once again serve to sustain rather than injure American agriculture. The trade agreements have not reduced in any way, as has been implied, the tariffs, in effect prior to 1933, of 42 cents a bushel on wheat, 25 cents on corn, 15 cents on rye, 16 cents on oats, 14 cents a pound on butter and 6 cents a pound on canned beef.

"The question concretely raised under the Smoot-Hawley policy is whether each and every industry in America shall be allowed embargo tariffs which will prevent the importation of 1 per cent or even less of commodities in the least competitive. Experience during the disastrous years prior to 1933 unequivocally teaches that an absolute embargo against the slightest competitive imports to this country means to invite and, in a sense, force other nations not to import, as they normally have in the past, some 50 per cent to 60 per cent of our raw cotton, 45 per cent of our tobacco, 35 per cent of our lard, 20 per cent of our wheat, 15 per cent of our apples, and many other large quantities of our surplus production in both agriculture and industry.

1929-32 Export Drop Recalled

"It will be recalled in this connection that our exports of farm products declined in value from $1,692,900,000 in 1929 to $662,000,000 in 1932.

"The maliciously distorted presentation of the results of the trade-agreements program made by these critics is not hampered by any memory of the fact that farm prices sank to disastrously low levels at the very time when the Smoot-Hawley act was in full bloom, and imports of competitive agricultural products were almost wholly excluded.

"They conveniently ignore the fact that during the first five months of 1936 total cash farm income (including rental and benefit payments) was $2,664,000,000, as compared with $2,488,000,000 during the same months of 1935. This increase of $176,000,000 in farm income over the first five months of last year disposes of the pretense that agriculture has been 'sold out' under the trade-agreements program.

that a careful examination of the document would be made.

American intervention, semi-official reports received here state, in the Spanish revolt or any other European conflict is regarded as dangerous in view of the coming November election in which the Administration has pledged a "hands off" policy.

Ford May Manufacture Own Automobile Tires

Domei

DETROIT, August 5—Ford Motors are reported to be making an investigation of the rubber industry situation with the idea of undertaking production of a portion of its own tire requirements, if unsettled conditions continue in the tire industry.

Thus far, it is revealed, no definite steps have been taken.

Genius in 5 Generations

Among the most outstanding examples of inherited genius is the family of the Morgensterns, master painters of Frankfurt, Germany. The last representative, Friedrich Ernst Morgenstern, was born in 1853 and died in 1919. His father Carl, his grandfather Johann Friedrich, his great-grandfather Johann Ludwig and his great-great-grandfather Johann Christoph were all master painters of the first rank.

The Bible Reader

George Kern of Columbus City, Iowa, has been a devoted Bible reader ever since childhood, but on his 50th birthday he decided to read every evening for 5000 nights. His quickest time for reading the entire Bible is 21 evenings. Mr. Kern says he still enjoys his Bible studies, because he is continually absorbing the good teachings therefrom.

MOJI VILLAGERS MARRY TOO YOUNG

Moji Village at the foot of Mt. Kurikoma, Miyagi Prefecture, is known for its custom of premature marriage. A 34-year-old man in that village has two grand-children, and girls are prone to get married when they are 13 to 14 years old. The school-masters and priests in the village are endeavoring to correct this habit.

TO PRESENT DOG TO MANCHOUKUO EMPEROR

Mr. Tokuzo Komai, who was given an order for his services in buiding the Manchoukuo Empire by the Manchoukuo Government, will present a Japanese dog to His Majesty the Emperor of Manchoukuo.

The dog is a five-month-old puppy owned by Mr. Kinji Horiuchi, a resident of Kofu City. It won the first prize in a Japanese dog show held recently in Tokyo.

Mr. Komai will take the puppy in the early part of September to Hsinking.

HYENA FAILS TO MAKE ESCAPE

An Egyptian hyena, which was being taken to Tabata Station on a motor tricycle from an animal-store in Asakusa, loosened the iron bars of its cage and scratched the shoulder of Kyusuke Ohara, the driver, with its front paw, when the tricycle was passing Shimmachi, Takinogawa-ku, at about 7 p.m. last Wednesday. The frightened driver lost control of the tricycle, which collided with a taxi coming from the opposite direction, while the hyena's cage was flung on to the pavement.

The wild animal uttered terrific roars and tried to break the cage, but was put under control by three policemen who rushed to the scene. Ohara sustained a blow on the forehead which will require a week to heal.

The hyena is five years old and measures five feet. It was on its way to the Municipal Zoo of Sendai, which had bought it.

Drought to Force Million In US On 'Dole' This Winter

Relief Estimate For 5 States Is Made As Government Increases Jobs To 65,000

Members of drought-stricken families consisting of at least 1,000,000 persons will be dependent on Federal aid for a livelihood in the U. S. Northwest this Winter, American officials estimated on June 18 as WPA increased from 50,000 to 65,000 its quota of immediate emergency jobs in five Northwestern States.

Resettlement officials reported that the emergency "dole" now being advanced to about 50,000 drought sufferers in this area would probably have to be extended to additional thousands, according to the New York Times, whose Washington report of July 18 continues: An exact figure will be set, according to present plans, on the return of Rexford G. Tugwell, Resettlement Administration chief, from the drought region.

The new WPA job quota will bring to 85,000 the number of drought families being aided by the organization at this time, since an additional 20,000 are receiving work in the hard-hit Southern States. Relief officials estimate that a theoretical average family in the drought region consists of four and a half persons.

In addition to those who had previously been supplied with work on a "security" WPA wage, 22,000 heads of farm families were supplied with jobs during the past week, officials reported, adding that the speed with which WPA jobs are being supplied is constantly increasing.

Dakotas Get Most Jobs

The increased WPA program will mean 50,000 drought jobs at once for the Dakotas alone, it was revealed. Officials set the new WPA quotas for the various States as follows: North Dakota, 25,000; South Dakota, 25,000; Montana, 6,000; Wyoming, 6,000, and Minnesota, 3,000.

With reports of water shortage rolling in from the drought region, officials reported that WPA activities are being concentrated upon water-conservation projects. Forty-two new projects of this kind today were ready for operation in Montana, forty-five in one county in Montana were submitted for approval to WPA headquarters here today, and numerous other projects are being developed all over the Northwest region.

Howard C. Hunter, in charge of this WPA work in the field, warned today, however, that no wells could be drilled upon private property with Federal funds, but only on public ground for the purpose of supplying water to communities.

The AAA tonight decided to modify its rules under the soil conservation program to permit farmers in most Western States, including those outside the drought region, to grow forage crops without sacrificing substitute AAA programs.

Pacific Coast Is Affected

This modification of the AAA program already had been extended from a group of Southern States to Montana, Wyoming and North Dakota. In view of the acute shortage of forage crops caused by the drought, the AAA decided on the extension to additional States, including those on the Pacific Coast. The Corn Belt will be excepted from these modifications in the official order to be issued Monday, it was reported.

Today's decision brought to the fore once again the question of whether the entire soil conservation program would not have to be modified radically next year in order to permit the building up of wheat and other surpluses which are expected to be eliminated or reduced by the drought. Officials were loath to discuss this possibility today but admitted that steps to encourage the building up of surpluses might be necessary.

These officials insisted that the soil conservation plan which supplanted the AAA benefit payment plan outlawed by the Supreme Court is not intended to curtail agricultural production, but merely to take acreage out of soil depleting crops, substituting legume crops instead.

Flies Stop Radio

Listeners-in to Belgrade wireless programs are being annoyed by constant fade-outs—caused by flies.

The insects get into the condensers and cause momentary short circuits. Fly-paper and other remedies have proved ineffective, but the experts are hoping that further experiments will succeed in keeping the flies out.

Litvinov Gets Birthday Honor Rare For USSR

carrying it out. His diplomatic skill, however, was not by any means the only quality flattered in this unusual publicity offering. Litvinov was represented as a true veteran of the Revolution, and the tale was retold of his escape from a Czarist prison, arms-running and secret revolutionary activities abroad, and other such adventures down to the time when he was arrested in London as a hostage for Bruce Lockhart.

But some points which the newspapers did not mention also may have interest.

The first is that Litvinov, as the Foreign Minister whose activities have symbolized active Soviet entry into European affairs, now is facing the moment when the whole structure he has raised is in danger, and his future activities will have more importance to his country than anything that has gone before. The new alignments taking shape in Central Europe as a result of the Austro-German agreement obviously increase the hazards for the Soviet Union, for its leading protagonist, Germany, is an avowed enemy of the Soviet, and the new Central European bloc is contrary to everything for which Litvinov has stood.

In this situation it may be that henceforth Soviet citizens will be encouraged to have as much personal interest in the individual conducting foreign affairs as in the latest hero of mine, farm or factory.

Chicherin Less Fortunate

The second interesting point is a contrast. Only a few days separated the birthday splurge in Litvinov's honor from the death and funeral of George Chicherin, his predecessor. Chicherin's passing received a very minimum of public notice—about three-quarters of a column of biography entirely devoid of the usual complimentary phrases. The explanation is not obscure. Whatever the relative merits as a statesman, Litvinov had long records as a Bolshevik agent, while Chicherin, although false to his own upper class origins because of Socialistic sympathies, never was a true proletarian revolutionary. In the background of a Bolshevik hero class solidarity is a necessity more than any other quality.

Incidentally, a minor personal experience of this correspondent in connection with Litvinov's birthday publicity may be worth recording. When he first presented this cable the censor on duty asked, "Why so much interest?" But the subject could not fail to interest any one who had lived for six years under dictatorships and observed the anonymous lives which even the most faithful lieutenants usually lead.

New Heroes on the Way

"Yes, but things are changing here," the censor said.

That suggestion seems to mean this:

Everyone knows that for a couple of years Stalin has been the object of much the same sort of personal praise lavished on Premier Benito Mussolini and Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler. Only a couple of weeks ago athletes performing in Red Square finished their gymnastics by shouting a chorus of, "We thank you, dear Comrade Stalin, for making life better."

However, at the moment, the Soviet Union is doing everything possible to wipe out any suggestion of similarity to Fascist dictatorship. It would not be surprising if the Litvinov birthday incident turned out to be the first step in a regular campaign to make popular heroes—at least on birthdays or other special occasions—of some individuals near Stalin, in that way lessenng the appearance of a one-man show.

Training Ship Returns From South Seas Trip

Domei

YOKOHAMA, August 18—Completing her 80-day cruise to the South Seas and China, on which she left on May 23, the Taisei Maru, a 2,428-ton training ship of the Tokyo Mercantile Marine School, returned to Yokohama at 6 a.m. today from Tsingtao with 62 students of the school on board.

Among the more important ports the vessel touched were Saipan, Dairen and Tsingtao.

League's Finances Stationary

Domei

GENEVA—On May 31, the League of Nations had received 46.33 per cent of the total sum due to it during the year 1936. This proportion is almost identical with that attained on the same date last year—47.83 per cent.

The total Budget for 1936 amounted to 28,279,901 gold francs—or about £2,000,000 at current rates. Of this sum, 13,102,576 francs (£800,000) have been received.

Memorial Service For 23 Japanese Is Held

Domei

HARBIN, August 18—Joint memorial services for the 23 Japanese and Manchu sailors including Lieutenants Riichi Fukunaga and Shumbi Shiraishi who were killed in action while repulsing bandits near Mulan on the eastern border of Pinchiang Province last Saturday, were held at 3 p.m. today at the Nishi Honganji Temple here.

The twenty-three sailors who died gallant deaths in Saturday's fighting with outlaws included, besides the three Japanese officers mentioned above, Chief Warrant Officer Shigeo Morimoto, Second Warrant Officer Aizaburo Nohumi and Third Warrant Officers Yoshisaburo Sanami and Yahei Nishida of the Japanese Naval Defense force here: eight Japanese and eight Manchu sailors of the Manchu River Defense Fleet, it is further announced.

Quezon Urges Filipinos Market Philippine Goods

Domei

MANILA, August 17—Setting up Japan as a model to follow, President Manuel Quezon, in a speech marking the opening of "Made in the Philippines Week," today urged Filipino producers to manufacture and market goods that in quality and durability hold their own with imported goods.

The progress of Japan which has risen from a medieval country to one of the most powerful nations in the world is almost too trite to mention, President Quezón declared, but it is an example and a lesson before us. "We are made of the same stuff as they," he concluded.

Shaw, Now 80, Still Hale And Is Working Hard

half hour's talk.

Very little guidance can be given a Shaw interview when he starts talking, and this time he chose to discourse about the United States and its political future. Some of it was Shaw "rechauffe," but with the delightful sauce of his soft voice, his deep chuckle and the play of his wise, young eyes. They are the eyes of a man of thirty—clear and sparkling, and all the more startling when he puts on glasses and peers over the tops. In his gray Norfolk jacket, golf knickers and green hose he looked rather like a pink-faced youngster playing grandpa with false whiskers and spectacles.

"When I was in New York I made a speech," he began, "in which I told the American people they would have to get rid of their Constitution. No one believed me then, but in two years it has become apparent even to Americans that something must be done. You can't have your judges and your President and Congress pulling against each other and get anywhere. Amendment won't be any good. Amendment is too slow, and the Constitution would still be too rigid in this changing world. No, it must go. It is an eighteenth-century document. It is done—finished—over with.

Discusses Roosevelt's Reforms

"Roosevelt is still making experiments with reform. It is true he must make experiments. All politicians are amateurs in government—though when it comes to graft they are professional enough."

Shaw threw his head back and led the chuckling. Then he went on in his furry Dublin voice that seemed fluffed a little by passing through the celebrated whiskers.

"But experiments with currency or juggling rent or taking from one to give to another will do no good. Land and resources and industries must be nationalized. There is no getting away from that."

Asked if he thought the United States in the process of becoming a Socialist republic would pass through a Fascist phase, Mr. Shaw said there was a lot of loose thinking about Fascism, and demanded a definition.

"I have heard Fascism defined as 'capitalism with guns'," observed his visitor.

Mr. Shaw chortled in advance this time. "How is that different from what you have today?" he demanded.

"But surely the examples one sees in Germany and Italy are different from the governments of the United States and England."

A Slight Difference

"No, sir," said Mr. Shaw firmly. "The only difference is in the comparative efficiency of the so-called Fascist and democratic countries. Dictators are nothing but the result of people growing sick of parliaments and politicians and their pitiful inefficiency in this day and age. It takes Parliament thirty years to pass a measure it should be able to pass in two hours. If the politicians take thirty years doing two hours of real work, some day they will find themselves in a position where they will have to try to do thirty years work in two hours. Then, where will they be?"

Again the fine head went back in laughter, and Mr. Shaw grasped his coat lapels firmly in two hands and held them there—perhaps his most characteristic physical posture.

"You don't seem to see a rosy future for democratic or libertarian institutions, Mr. Shaw," his interlocutor observed.

Government "Conspiracy"

"Why, of course not, my boy. All government is a conspiracy to take away the freedom of the individual."

"But some more so than others. You wouldn't like living and trying to express your opinions under a dictatorship, would you?"

"Well, sir if you think there is any real freedom of expression in this socalled democratic country, just try writing something out of the ordinary for the paper."

"But wouldn't you tend to explode with a loud report if you were repressed under a dictatorship?"

"Not a bit of it. I am used to it already. As a dramatist, I have been repressed here and in your country. Of course, the authorities haven't understood my most dangerous statements, and have left them pass while banning the innocuous things. That is always the way with governments—maybe it will always be even with dictatorships."

The conversation veered to more personal matters. Mr. Shaw admitted he enjoyed his celebrity, wasn't worried at all by the necessity of living up to a great reputation, and if the public believed he habitually made two witticisms to each sentence, it was too bad for it. He was usually in deadly earnest, he said.

Throughout the interview there were only occasional flashes of the showman Shaw, exploiting his own immodesty. The man who once said he would consider the peerage if they could find him a title more distinguished than George Bernard Shaw went into character when he was asked if he wished to make a very startling statement for American consumption.

"I always make startling statements," he said. "What had you in mind?"

"How about saying something nice about the American people on the occasion of your eightieth birthday?"

"No, I shan't nat the United States on the head just now," said Mr. Shaw, smiling through his apparently false whiskers. "The only thing I can say is I am enormously interested as a high zoologist in how people who came from the same stock as ourselves can be so enormously different."

Then, like the old philosopher in "Heartbreak House," who always exited on a good line, he jumped up and made his departure.

Ickes Contrasts Views Of Landon

favor that also."

Earlier Activities Recalled

Mr. Ickes referred to the record of Mr. Landon's views during the early stages of the Roosevelt administration. He recalled a statement he said Mr. Landon made at the opening of an oil conference, when operators were trying to organize a code under the terms of the National Industrial Recovery Act, wherein he enlisted with Mr. Roosevelt "for the duration of the war" against the depression.

"It would appear now," Mr. Ickes added, "that 'Candidate' Landon has gone A. W. O. L. from the war against poverty and want and the exploitation of the weak, in which he enlisted in 1933."

Mr. Ickes said that "Governor" Landon, or "Oil Man' Landon had none of the fears of a dictatorship resulting from the measures then taking form that he now expresses. He quoted Mr. Landon as saying at the oil conference in 1933:

"'But if we can solve this question within the industry, I am willing to attempt to do it and give ninety days to do it, and if we do not do it, then I see nothing else but the ironhand of a dictator. That seems to be what we come to in all other lines of industry and finance.'"

He quoted him, too, as favoring price-fixing in the oil code, and read from a telegram reputedly sent to the President by Governor Landon on June 4, 1934, in which he credited the oil code with increasing the buying power of Kansas alone by $33,000,000.

Mr. Ickes expressed "wonder" that Mr. Landon and Colonel Frank Knox should take the appellation of "progressive." But he said that William Randolph Hearst had named them that, and "who in the whole country, may I ask, has a better right to name the children than their father?".

"Mr. Landon and Colonel Knox may be as progressive as the not disinterested Mr. Hearst avers," Mr. Ickes said, "but if they are, then it is a curious coincidence that the most reactionary individuals and interests in the United States are supporting them."

Soviets To Link Seas With Canal

USSR To Begin Work On Volga-Don Waterway In 1937; Moscow To Become Port

The Soviet Government finally has given definite orders to proceed with the construction of a canal connecting the Volga and Don Rivers. The general plans have been approved, and final technical details are now being worked out. Construction will begin in the spring of 1937 and the 73-mile canal must be finished by 1942, says the Christian Science Monitor.

This is the fourth and last in the series of great canals which is transforming European Russia's water transport system. The first, the Baltic-White Sea Canal, was completed in 1933; the second, the Moscow-Volga Canal, will be opened next spring; and the third, the Manich Canal, connecting the Caspian and Black Seas, is already under construction.

Moscow to Be Real Port

These canals have immense political and economic importance. They mean that Soviet Russia will no longer be "land-locked" and will not have to seek "warm water ports." They will provide direct water connections between the Baltic and White Seas in the north and the Caspian and Black Seas in the south. They will convert Moscow into an important port. They will permit ocean steamers to reach the hitherto land-locked Caspian Sea.

The Volga-Don Canal was originally included both in the first and the second Five-Year Plans, but the project was deferred because of its great cost, estimated at 2,000,000,000 rubles ($400,000,000 at the official exchange rate).

The canal will run between Krasnoarmeisk a town on the Volga just below Stalingrad, and the Cossack village of Khumovskaya, on the Don River near the town of Kalach. The work, unlike that on the other three canals, will be completely mechanized, so that much less unskilled labor will be required.

Next spring work will start on a dam across the Don River at Khumovskaya, 29,523 feet in length, which will raise the water level by 117 feet and divert the Don's waters into a deep waterway 23 miles in length.

Hydro-Electric Stations

Three hydro-electric stations will be built near the Don Dam, with a capacity of 531,000 kilowatts. These stations are expected to develop 2300 million kilowatt hours annually.

Dredging operations on a colossal scale are necessary to complete the project. Deep-water channels will be dredged for 400 miles on the lower Don between Khumovskaya and the Sea of Azov, and a new channel will be created for the lower Volga through the Kalmitskaya plains, diverting the Volga's waters from the present shallows which interfere with navigations.

The Volga-Don Canal not only will complete the magnificent river transport system connecting the five great seas of European Russia; the project also will provide fresh water supplies for Stalingrad and other towns, will protect a million acres along the lower Don from flood danger, and will permit irrigation of about 750,000 acres of waterless land in the Kalmitskaya plains.

Huge Undertaking

Construction of the dam and canal involves the removal of 194,000,000 cubic meters of earth, and the use of 1,600,000 cubic meters of crushed rock and 3,000,000 cubic meters of reinforced concrete as well as 50,000 tons for steel and iron.

The canal will have a maximum depth of 123 feet, and will be wide enough at all points to permit two ships of 20,000-ton capacity to pass.

Soviet shipyards have been instructed to construct a fleet of steamers and barges for use on the new waterway. Steel barges for transporting grain will have a capacity of 3700 tons, and oil barges will have a capacity of 20,000 tons. It is estimated that the freight turnover through the canal in the first year of operation will reach 17,200,000 tons.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Tornado-Proof Tornado Policy

This remarkable case of recovery of an insurance policy is reported to me by the Phoenix Insurance Co. of Hartford, which company wrote a fire and tornado insurance policy on the home of W. R. Armstrong of Tupelo, Miss. In the spring of this year, Tupelo was stricken by a storm of tornado proportions, leaving many dwellings and other buildings in ruins. Only the brick foundations of the Armstrong home remained standing. All personal effects and furniture were strewn for miles around, including the insurance policy, which was blown 105 miles. It was picked up by J. T. Alexander in the woods near Tuscambia, Alabama and returned to Mr. Armstrong.

Streetcar Pass For A Dog

When her master was ill in a hospital "Mary," a pointer dog owned by Charles Booth of Danville, Va., puzzled over his absence, took to jumping on a streetcar and going to his place of business to await him. This demonstration of devotion impressed the street railway officials and a pass was issued for the dog, as well as instructions to motormen to look out for her. It was uncanny how "Mary" knew which car to take and where to get off, but she never missed, until her death from old age in August, 1935.

Officers Pay Respects To Kanroku Ichiki

Domei

WASHINGTON, August 20.—The obscure grave of Midshipman Kanroku Ichiki, first Japanese navy man to die on American soil while attending the United States Naval Academy in 1877, today became the object of a pilgrimage of high Japanese naval officers headed by Vice-Admiral Zengo Yoshida, commander-in-chief of the Japanese Training Squadron now on a visit here.

After placing a wreath on the tomb of the former midshipman in Oak Hill Cemetery, the officers proceeded to Annapolis in order to pay a visit to the Naval Academy. Tonight the officers will return to the capital and will be guests of honor at a dinner to be given by Ambassador Hiroshi Saito, Japanese Ambassador here.

Our London Letter

By ROBERT MACKAY

LONDON.—Next to banking, insurance in all its forms is the largest British financial institution. It is customary, therefore, for the British economic journals to make reviews of insurance in the same way as they do of banking. The well-known London statistical and economic weekly, The Statist, has just published such a review from which much can be learned as to the activities of British insurance companies during 1935. Summing up these activities, the general impression to be gained is that in 1935, the companies, despite many difficulties, may congratulate themselves on the year's work. The chief contributory cause is naturally the general recovery in British trade. But, as British insurance activities are also international in their scope, a more general trade recovery throughout the world is essential for completely profitable working.

The dividends distributed by the British insurance companies are not as a rule directly dependent upon underwriting profits. Profits come from the interest earned on the reserves built up out of the excess of underwriting profits over underwriting losses. A profitable year from an underwriting point of view increases reserves and thus improves the outlook for future dividends rather than immediate distribution. This feature of the year's work is reflected in the increase in the value of British insurance shares during the year 1935-36. According to the Actuaries' Investment Index, these shares which stood at 122 at the end of June, 1935, were 133 at the end of June, 1936.

Nevertheless the actual distribution of dividends by the British companies for 1933 have been far from unsatisfactory. A number of companies have increased their dividends and not one has made a reduction.

Of the many branches of insurance, ordinary life insurance is the largest. The figures for business in this department in 1935 show improvement under almost every heading. New business has shown a very substantial increase in each of the past three years. The summary of the revenue accounts shows an increase in premiums and in funds, and a decrease in surrenders. The latter fact is especially an indication of general financial recovery. There has also been an increase in claims, but this reflects only the increased amount of business that has been done in the past. It is interesting to read that death claims were lighter than calculations predicted and that there was a consequent increase in endowment claims.

New ordinary life business in the last few years has steadily increased. Before the war, i.e. in 1913, the total of new life policies was 324,654, insuring a sum exceeding £67,000,000. In 1929, just before the world-wide slump in trade, there were 468,188 new policies, insuring a sum exceeding £162,000,000. In 1934 the respective figures were 583,057 new policies, insuring £207,000,000. Last year an unofficial estimate put the new policies at 607,000, insuring a sum of £221,000,000.

It is amazing how British life insurance has grown during the last two decades. In 1913 premiums received for this class of business amounted to more than £31,000,000 and claims paid exceeded £26,000,000. In 1934 the premium income was £77,000,000 and claims paid amounted to more than £69,000,000. Last year it is estimated that premiums totalled more than £80,000,000, while claims paid exceeded £73,000,000.

Turning to other branches of British insurance business, it is satisfactory to record that, in the transactions of fire insurance, British offices did remarkably well in 1935. There was a slight reduction in the fire premium incomes received by most companies, compared with 1934, but, on the other hand, in the case of nearly every company, the ratio of claims to premiums was distinctly lower. Marine insurance was dull in 1935; in both hull and cargo markets rates have continued to decline. The first half of this year, however, has seen an event of real importance to this market, namely, the placing of the full sea risk on the new giant Cunard-White-Star liner, the Queen Mary. Industrial life insurance made uneventful progress last year; business done, premium income and assets showed steady increases. Finally employers' liability, personal accident, and motor insurance all met with fair success in 1935, but motor insurance has suffered to some extent by the progressive increases in the level of damages awarded by the courts to the victims of accidents. General accident business has, however, been quite profitable.

Centenary Celebration of London University

The most impressive scenes in the colorful life of London's summer season were witnessed recently when the world's largest university, the University of London, celebrated its centenary with a week of receptions, balls, parties and other festivities. The occasion will for long remain in the memory of the stream of delegates who had arrived from all parts of the world to offer their congratulations.

The seed from which the London University sprang was sown in 1825 when, through the columns of a newspaper, a poet and journalist by the name of Thomas Campbell began an agitation for more generous opportunities for university education, advocating that London, then already the greatest city of the world, should have its own university, open to students of all classes and creeds. At that time the only universities existing in England were the centuries-old institutions at Oxford and Cambridge, where an essential condition of admittance was that all students must belong to the Church of England. Thomas Campbell's appeal met with such a measure of support that within two years a sum had been subscribed which was sufficiently large for the erection of the first building of the University of London.

University merely in name, this first college (which later took the name of University College) was not destined to achieve its aim without a strenuous fight. Welcoming, as University College did, students of Jewish, Catholic or any or no religion, the orthodox Church of England immediately challenged its success by opening a rival college, King's College, in Strand in London. But this obstacle was overcome, as were also those put in the way by influential bodies who considered a university education the exclusive privilege of the upper classes, and University College was granted its Royal Charter—as a college.

Worthy example of the traditional English genius for compromise, it was neither University College nor King's College but a third body which, in 1836, was granted a University Charter and thereby given power to confer degrees. This third body took the title of University of London, and under its aegis the original two colleges developed into institutions which are in effect though not in name great universities. Including the original colleges, London University now embodies forty colleges and twenty lesser institutions, on whose staff are 241 Professors, 151 Readers and 922 University Teachers. On the rolls are over 11,000 full-time students, or more than a quarter of Great Britain's entire student population, and nearly 4,000 part-time students, besides a large number of occasional students. About 2,000 students come from overseas.

Apart from its size, the dual character of the University of London makes it unique among the world's universities. Until 1900 London University functioned purely as an examining body, examining and conferring degrees on students from the many University Colleges in England and in various parts of the British Empire. This function the University retains as its present "external" side, and external examinations in all subjects, excepting medicine and engineering, are open to all British subjects wherever they may reside in the Empire. But it is as a teaching institution and in its unique facilities for research work that the University of London has become a seat of learning of supreme importance. Specialized schools for the study of Medicine, Agriculture, Engineering, Domestic Science, Economics, Aeronautics and a great many other subjects have been absorbed. The School of Oriental Languages provides for the study of languages and dialects not only of Asia but also of Africa; the School of Tropical Medicine and the School of Hygiene are centers from which the foremost experts of Europe draw valuable information; while the British Post-graduate School of Medicine has provided a rallying point for advanced medical knowledge which has already proved of the greatest benefit to professionals in every part of the world.

The Philippine Dilemma

By HORACE B. POND

Asia

Nowadays it is generally recognized that the economic provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Act, which restrict by quotas and other means the import of Philippine products into the United States even before political independence is achieved on July 4, 1946, will cause an economic collapse in the Philippines. The President of the United States has therefore announced that the conference of representatives of the two governments provided for in Section 13 of the Act "for the purpose of formulating recommendations as to future trade relations between the government of the United States and the independent government of the Philippine Islands" will be held at the earliest practicable time. Studies are now being made in preparation for that conference.

Any recommendations adopted by the conference will, however, be ineffective unless finally approved by legislative action both in the Philippines and in the United States. If, in order to avoid economic collapse, the Philippines are to be accorded preferential trade treatment in the United States after independence, either the United States must arrange to except them from the effects of the "most-favored-nation" clause in commercial treaties with foreign governments or Philippine independence must be limited by action taken prior to July 4, 1946. If, however, a reciprocal preferential trade agreement between the Philippines and the United States should be reached and made operative by appropriate legislation, it probably would not be possible for the President of the United States to negotiate with foreign powers "a treaty for the perpetual neutralization of the Philippine Islands, if and when Philippine independence shall have been achieved," as provided in Section 11 of the Tydings-McDuffie Act. Since neutralization presumes equality of treatment for the products of all nations which agree thereto, Japan, for example, could hardly be expected to guarantee a preferred economic position for the United States in the Philippines.

Then, too, naval bases—which, according to Section 10 b, are to retain their present status pending adjustment and settlement by negotiation between the President of the United States and the government of the Philippine Islands—are inconsistent with the idea of neutralization. Would any nation be willing to agree to the neutralization of the Philippines when and if the United States retains and is free to develop naval bases therein? Japan, in particular, would object to such naval bases; for their very existence would be interpreted, as in the past, as a potential threat or at the very least a menace.

That Japan holds this view is evident from the statement of a Japanese official spokesman, made in December, 1935, shortly before the opening of the London Naval Conference, that, among other things, Japan proposed permanent neutralization for the Philippines involving permanent withdrawal of United States naval and army units stationed there. To this proposal the United States could hardly agree at this time; for it will continue to exercise sovereignty over the Philippines until July 4, 1946, and, therefore, to be responsible until that date for the conditions which may prevail therein. About a month after the above proposal was made, Japan evidently about-faced; for a Japanese Foreign Office spokesman stated, "The Japanese government renounces the idea that the great powers should conclude agreements guaranteeing the freedom, integrity or neutrality of another nation." This was interpreted as indicating that Japan is averse to any Pacific pact which would guarantee the independence of the Philippines. There thus is grave doubt whether, even though the United States should abandon its Philippine naval bases and fueling stations, a treaty for the neutralization of the Philippines would be possible.

The United States must therefore decide whether its own best interests require it to retain naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippines and to continue the obligation to defend the Islands.

Opinions on this question are divided. Some authorities contend that naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippines are a source of weakness, since they could not long be defended, and that they will eventually be the cause of trouble with Japan. Those who hold this opinion contend that the United States should at the earliest possible date get out of the Philippines and retire to the east of a line drawn from the Aleutian Islands, west of Hawaii, to the Panama Canal; and that when it gets out of the Philippines it should stay out, and assume no further responsibility for them, regardless of what happens to them. This opinion probably is widely held in the United States.

Those who hold the contrary opinion contend that this is cowardly; and that the United States, by giving Philippine products free access to its protected markets, has raised the level of living of the Filipino people, developed communications and agriculture, industry and commerce, improved health conditions, established an educational system on a broad base and set up a government of the Filipino people, and therefore cannot in good conscience abandon the Philippines and thus destroy much of that which has been built up and, in effect, turn the Filipino people over to a predatory power. They further contend:

That the question of naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippines is but incidental to a larger question of policy—that of the United States in the Pacific and the Far East;

That the abandonment of the Philippines will also probably make necessary the abandonment of Guam;

That, as a result, the maintenance of the "Open Door" policy of the United States as to China will be impossible and, consequently, the domination of China by Japan will be complete, making necessary, practically, the withdrawal of the United States from all interests in China proper, just as American interests in Manchuria are being forced to withdraw;

That the abandonment of the Philippines might, and probably would, ultimately result in their domination by Japan;

That the abandonment of American naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippines would be a reversal of the traditional idea that they are necessary to match those of other powers;

That, if the United States abandons the Philippines and Japan steps in, the status quo in the Far East will be upset and this will precipitate grave international questions which would lead to war;

That international good behavior makes it necessary for the United States to remain;

That, if the United States abandons its Philippine naval bases and if a neutralization treaty can be concluded, such a treaty will be no more effective against the known ambitions of Japan than the Washington Nine-Power Treaty and other treaties have been as to China; and

That, if the United States completely abandons the Philippines, it never can return without a war, regardless of conditions within or without the Philippines; for, although Japan has agreed to respect the present American rights in the Philippines, Japan has in the past two years repeatedly proclaimed a Monroe Doctrine for the Far East, with itself as the mentor and the dominator. Men high in the Japanese government are reported to have stated in effect that as long as the United States exercises sovereignty over the Philippines it will be respected by Japan, but that, once the United States relinquishes sovereignty and retires from the Philippines, Japan will never permit its return.

Some authorities contend that the best assurance of peace in the Far East is cooperation between England and the United States—England with its Singapore base and the United States with adequate bases in the Philippines.

Since the approval and the acceptance of the Tydings-McDuffie Act early in 1934 there have been grave changes in the Far East. Not only has Japan continued its advance in China but at the end of 1934 Japan denounced the Washington naval treaties negotiated in 1921, and thus they will expire at the end of 1936.

One of those treaties provides "that no new fortifications or naval bases shall be established in" certain territories and possessions, including the Philippines; "that no measures shall be taken to increase the existing naval facilities for the repair and maintenance of naval forces; and that no increase shall be made in the coast defenses of such territories and possessions.

By another treaty, known as the Four-Power Treaty, England, Japan, France and the United States agreed to respect the rights of each in their respective territories and possessions.

By still another treaty, known as the Nine-Power Treaty, the contracting nations, including Japan, agreed to "respect the sovereignty of China and to provide her the fullest opportunity to develop and maintain an effective and stable government."

Shortly after the invasion of Manchuria by Japan the United States stated in identic notes to China and Japan "that it cannot admit the legality of any situation de facto, nor does it intend to recognize any treaty or agreement entered into between those governments or agents thereof, which may impair the treaty right of the United States, or its citizens in China, including those which relate to the sovereignty, the independence, or the territorial and administrative integrity of the Republic of China." The United States has consistently adhered to the policy set forth in these notes.

Those who hold that the United States should get out of the Far East go so far as to say that the domination of China by Japan is no concern of the United States, and in some cases, that this would be in the interest of the Western World. They express the belief that the unstable, and often chaotic, conditions prevailing in China can best be corrected by Japan, and that Japanese domination would bring peace and order to China, while the economic development which would ensue would create a great demand for the products of the West. They completely ignore the fact that, when the Washington Nine-Power Treaty was negotiated, it was recognized that for some time conditions might be unsettled in China but that it was nevertheless agreed that China should be given every opportunity to set its own house in order, and to do so without outside interference. They also completely ignore the ultimate effect on the West if Japan were to organize China economically and as a military unit.

But, whatever may be the effect of the violation by Japan of the Nine-Power Treaty on the treaty regarding fortifications and naval bases within the territories and possessions of the United States, it is clear that the naval parity treaty denounced by Japan at the end of 1934 will, on expiration at the end of 1936 (unless a new treaty is arranged in the meantime, which seems improbable,) leave the United States free to develop fortifications and naval bases in the Philippines. On the other hand, Japan also will be free to develop fortifications and naval bases in Formosa, the Bonins and the Loochoos, and England at Hong Kong; and this will upset generally the status quo in the Far East.

Had Japan not violated its agreements as to China or denounced the naval treaties, no immediate decision regarding naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippines probably would have been necessary; for the status quo in the Far East as to naval strength and defenses in territories and possessions would have been maintained, while the leading powers had agreed to respect the rights of the United States in the Philippines. Only on the recognition of the independence of the Philippines would a decision as to naval bases and fueling stations have been necessary, and then because the obligations of the signatories of the Four-Power Treaty, as to the Philippines, will have ceased, since the Philippines then will not be a possession of the United States.

Now, however, the United States must soon determine a policy as to naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippines. It cannot idly stand by while Japan strengthens and develops naval bases immediately to the north of the Philippines, unless it decides to withdraw completely from the Philippines and to forego all rights to maintain naval bases and fueling stations therein.

What the decision will be is a live question. Without doubt many hold the opinion that the United States should not have obligations far removed from its continental shores, although there are many who, as to the Philippines at least, hold the contrary opinion. But, even though the United States should consider it advisable or desirable to retain naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippines, the final outcome must depend upon vital decisions by the Filipino people. It is hardly conceivable that the United States would be willing to retain these bases in a completely independent Philippines. Their continuance would perpetuate the present obligation to protect the Philippines from outside aggression. This obligation would make it necessary to exercise control over the foreign relations of the Philippines; otherwise treaties made by the Philippines might either result in complications or make untenable the American naval bases and fueling stations. The United States also would have a vital interest in the maintenance of peace and order within the Philippines; for, with naval bases there, it could not permit other nations to intervene, either for the enforcement of obligations, or for the protection of their nationals. The United States hence would of necessity require authority over the internal affairs of the Philippines commensurate with the responsibility which thus would be indefinite continuation of the veto and other powers which are reserved to the United States by the Tydings-McDuffie Act during the life of the present Commonwealth Government. Many people contend that even these powers are inadequate, in view of the responsibility of the United States, and that such powers should be sufficient to enable the United States to take preventive action rather than to wait until conditions so develop as to make intervention necessary.

If the United States were to be given adequate authority of this sort it would be necessary to amend the Tydings-McDuffie Act, and, since that Act was duly accepted by the Filipino people, the necessary amendments, in fairness, could be made only with the consent of the Filipino people. This would, in effect, mean the indefinite continuation of the Commonwealth Government.

From what has been stated above, the following conclusions are inevitable:

First: The United States, as a result of the denunciation of the Washington naval treaties by Japan, must soon determine its Pacific and Far Eastern policies, and, as an incident thereto, whether or not to retain naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippines.

Second: The United States cannot add to or strengthen its naval bases in the Philippines until their status and the rights of the United States in the Philippines have been determined as provided in the Tydings-McDuffie Act.

Third: If the United States retains naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippines, or is granted preferential treatment for its products in the Philippines, a treaty for the neutralization of the Philippines probably will be impossible, and may be impossible in any case.

Fourth: If the United States retains naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippines, it will be necessary for the United States to accord to Philippine products such preferential treatment in the United States as will insure economic and social stability. Such preferential treatment might be the indefinite continuation of present trade arrangements, a reciprocal trade arrangement along the lines of the Cuban-American reciprocal trade treaty or an arrangement so graduated as to preferences as to withdraw such present trade preferences as it may be possible to without vitally upsetting social and economic stability.

Fifth: If the United States retains naval bases and fueling stations in the Philippines it must alone continue the obligation of protecting them, and the responsibility for the maintenance of internal peace and order therein.

Sixth: In view of that responsibility the United States must control the foreign relations of the Philippine government and have at least the powers and the authority now vested in the United States under the provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Act.

Seventh: This would require at least the consent of the Filipino people, and, if such consent is not given, the United States of necessity must retire completely from the Philippines and assume no further responsibility for them.

The Fleet Situation In The Baltic Sea

In the capitals of the several Baltic States, the developments in connection with the naval question have been causing some degree of concern. The feeling of uneasiness has become all the more acute ever since the Montreux conference has created the possibility that Soviet Russian war vessels from the Black Sea might pass through the Dardanelles, insofar as such vessels were to be used to strengthen the Russian naval units in the White Sea and the Baltic, and were not intended to increase the Russian fleet in the waters of the Far East.

As a matter of fact, the Soviet fleet in the Baltic has already assumed threatening dimensions, although until now no accurate information of its exact strength has been obtainable. According to the information which has been officially given out, the Soviet Union has in the Baltic three ships-of-the-line of about 24,000 tons each with maximum calibre guns of 30.5 centimeters, one cruiser, twelve destroyers, apparently at least forty submarines, mostly of modern type, three older and ten modern torpedo-boats, three mine-layers, several coast-guard vessels, and two gun-boats. It is, however, well known that these figures are incomplete, and this uncertainty as to the actual strength of the Russian fleet is the main cause for the feelings of uncertainty and uneasiness which are now so prevalent.

The unquestionably offensive character of the Soviet fleet,—this is apparent from the official figures alone,—is a matter of common knowledge, and it is perfectly clear to everyone that the fleets of the other Baltic States which are of a strictly defensive type, would not have the slightest chance against the Russian naval units.

It should be realized that even the Swedish fleet, which is the largest of these, consists of only ten 6900 ton coast armored cruisers which have no gun calibre over 28 centimeters, to say nothing of the fact that only three of these cruisers are of modern type, the remaining being thirty years old or more. Besides this, Sweden only possesses one airplane-carrying cruiser with eight planes, and an old coast armored cruiser remodelled as a plane-carrier, with four planes; further, an obsolete 4000-ton cruiser, four destroyers in commission and two under construction, and nineteen submarines, of which two are not yet launched. A few torpedoboats, a mine-layer, two mine-sweepers under construction, and two in commission, complete the strength of Sweden's navy,—a strength totally unfitted to attack the coast of another country.

This is even more truly the case with the Danish and Norwegian fleets. Denmark has only three coast armored cruisers of from 3400 to 3800 tons and maximum calibres of 24 centimeters, 23 torpedo-boats, and eight submarines, one mine-layer and six sweepers. Two additional submarines have been planned.

Norway's fleet consists of four coast armored cruisers of 4200 tons with maximum calibres of 21 centimeters, but in Norway's case all of these ships are nearly forty years old. Its navy includes also six little destroyers, two of which are not yet finished, 25 torpedo-boats, and 11 mine-layers most of which are also obsolete in type.

Finland has two 4000-ton coast armored cruisers with 25.4 calibre guns. Out of the five Finnish submarines, only three have a displacement of 500 tons, the other two being considerably smaller. Finally, the Finnish fleet includes six gunboats, seven motor torpedo-boats, six minelayers, and 24 mine-sweepers.

The fleets of the remaining Baltic nations are so insignificant as to play no important role whatever. Latvia has just two submarines and two mine-layers, Lithuania one coast-guard vessel, Estonia four coast-guard gun-boats and two old side-wheelers transformed into mine-layers, two gun-boats, three mine-sweepers, and a former German torpedo-boat. Two more submarines are being built in England. The navy of Poland is also small, consisting of two finished and two unfinished destroyers, three commissioned submarines and three more contracted for. These, at least, are all of modern type. Further, Poland has four mine-sweepers in commission and three more planned, eight river gun-boats, and several steamers carrying guns. A mine-layer is being built.

Among the Countries bounding on the Baltic Sea is the German Reich. Moreover, the strength of the German fleet is definitely determined by the treaty with England. In this treaty, Germany has been content with a naval strength equal to 35 per cent of that of England, and for the reason, as is always emphasized in Berlin, that this strength is considered sufficient for the purposes of defense. Germany, therefore, lays stress on the fact that its navy has a defensive character only, and in point of fact it would scarcely be conceivable for the German navy in case of serious trouble, to do more than defend its somewhat extended coast-line on the Baltic. Besides which, the German navy has a long stretch of coast on the German Sea to guard.

Certain French newspapers have lately taken it upon themselves to assert that Finland was secretly making war preparations against Soviet Russia. This assertion, of course, is without any foundation, for it would require a stupendous amount of additional armament, if a nation wished to make the attempt even to a slight degree to equal the Soviet armament, and for a small country, the means therefore would be lacking. Therefore, the French announcements have been denied by the Finnish Foreign Office in a very sharp tone. The only circumstance which could have given the French press the occasion to make such statements, is that at intervals for some time past, the Finnish press have been trying to persuade public opinion in Sweden, that a re-fortification of the Aland Islands, situated between the two countries, would be of mutual advantage. These efforts on the part of Finland have not received as yet any very responsive echo in Sweden. But the very fact that these utterances are now being repeated, is a sign of how much concern the Baltic Sea question is giving, and what turn that question will take in the not far distant future, should Soviet Russia continue its naval armament and increase its preponderance of naval strength in the Baltic. The Swedish Foreign Minister Westman has recently spoken with this thought in mind, and has declared that in the countries of the North, people were beginning to entertain doubts as to the genuineness of the Russian thesis as to the indivisibility of peace.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—It is always a matter of conjecture to stay-at-homes and swindled tourists if travel pays. The "antis" say it doesn't, and that in soliciting a job nobody gives a hoot whether you have seen the Taj Mahal by moonlight, sunlight, lamplight or at all. Whether you have swum the Hellespond or drowned in it is of no concern.

Mrs. Haven

In fact, Mr. and Mrs. Employer would a little rather not hear about your geographic conquests. Certainly your co-worker who plugs along hopefully of some day taking a devilish jaunt to Atlantic City would do you less intentional harm if you confined your thoughts and conversation to the city limits.

However, on the q. t., through the pomp and some circumstance of treks to the "Atlantic Cities" of several nations, life for us is less dull. For instance, it is gratifying to learn from explorer Roy Chapman Andrews that the Temple of Heaven on which we strolled in Peiping is being restored.

The present Spanish revolution takes on meaning when we read of the bombardment of Barcelona's Colon Hotel and, with a twitch of magic memory, reach into top drawer and bring forth a baggage label of the periled Spanish hostelry. Only sunshine pelted the moorish roof of the Hotel Colon then. The streets of Barcelona were lined with loving couples strolling arm in arm, unmindful of the horrors of future wars.

Travel makes it easier to follow O. O. McIntyre when, in his daily New York column, he describes Barney Gallant as one who "has tasted life, the brackish with the sweet" by journalizing in Fleet Street, and being a "night clerk at the Raffles in Singapore."

The last citation makes Barney Gallant more than a name in the dark as we remember the palm-fringed garden of the Raffles Hotel. Sipping our first and last "Singapore gin sling" there was incidental to the maze of ships that came and anchored and sailed in the gigantic British port.

The New York columnist credits Gallant with serving as a "secret service agent in Egypt and shipping around the Horn on a wind-jammer as cabin boy." Up come memories of ninety miles of road winding across the Libyan Desert from Suez to Cairo in the milky haze of an Egyptian morning, climazed by the beckoning welcome of the Sphinx and Pyramids of Gizeh as we bounded through the land of the Pharoahs to the River Nile.

And when stories trickle in of King Edward facing death in Hyde Park multitudinous scenes flash back of the changing of the guard at Buckingham Palace, Westminster Abbey and its hallowed dead, London Bridge and the human heads which once beaded its railing, the tinkling names of Piccadilly, Tipperary, Haymarket, Covent Gardens and Rotten Row.

Even a tiny ferry boat crossing a Yankee stream becomes a Channel steamer setting off from Calais on its hour race to Dover and England. A rock fence skirting a Virginia tobacco field becomes the Great Wall of China protecting acres of daikon from wintry blasts of a Manchurian storm. A package of tapioca on a grocery store shelf unfolds into groves of thin tapioca trees in the jungles of Sumatra as we race back toward a ship in the little Dutch port of Belawan-deli.

Then raindows, those glorious spans of color which tie the ends of a Western meadow and join with silent laughter the topmost pinnacles of skyscrapers. They transport the vagabond to a thousand deltas where, far from home, he has felt blessed by the sun and the rain.

It may have been a lunar rainbow out under the stars as he sat on the coast of Hawaii and watched the Southern Cross peep down on snow-capped Mauna Loa. Perhaps it was a rainbow which circled through the sky and touched the very bow of a ship headed for India across the Arabian Sea.

Each person must decide for himself whether it pays to travel, just the same as he must decide whether he will be a preacher, let his hair grow or jump off the high dive. All are not privileged to take long excursions by boat and train to lands afar, but there are shorter journeys that yield as rich rewards.

During the moments of deep repose, between daylight and darkness, work and play, sleep and consciousness, the gentle play of memory on a garden of roses is restful, be it a Japanese garden, a lawn in Vienna or the neighbor's terrace next door.

When the strenuous course of life's journey is run and we coast along the straightaway of our later years perhaps we will find the answer. To the mind in retrospect there must come greater joy in reliving the scenes of strange lands and peoples, trails and intrigue, than in listing the stocks and bonds that might have been ours.

Overheard in a streetcar: "Notice where Helen Wills Moody is going into the dressmaking business."

Her friend: "Yeah, just on her name she should make a lots."

Southerners revel seemingly in expressing the essence of plenty with "a lots." And all West Virginians pronounce "fish" feesh.

Of course, the West has its disadvantages too. The fortunate along the Barbary Coast have to refine their pockets to keep the silver dollars from slipping through. In the East in nearly five years we haven't seen a silver dollar. If memory serves correctly, on a recent cross-country motor trip the first gas station to issue weighty money was in Wyoming. East of the Continental Divide it was dollar bills, and to the West was silver.

There is something satisfying about

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

JOHN O'GROAT'S

John O'Groat's House is the legendary site of the octagonal house built by John Groot, a Dutch emigrant in the time of King James IV. Groot brought his family here from Holland, and in time there were 8 heads of the family who would dispute the precedence at the family table at mealtimes. John settled this dispute by building an octagonal house, with 8 doors and an octagonal table. Each head would enter his own door and be satisfied to sit at his own end of the table. The site, which is now marked by a flag and mound, is popularly associated with the most northern point of Scotland. The legend is perpetuated in John O'Groat's Hotel which has an octagonal dining room and a table of the same shape.

GAUZE-EATING DOG

The Great Dane, "Blitzen," is owned by Latham Avery, dairy farmer of Mystic, Conn. Twice each day Mr. Avery strains the milk through small thin cotton and gauze pads, leaving them coated with rich cream and fat, which the dog relishes very much. The fact that the food is attached to pieces of gauze doesn't bother him a bit. He eats ever two square feet of it a day, and more than 800 square feet each year.

Landon Is Assailed By Democrat Governors

For some the terms were shortened. Kansas was the only State in the Union which had made no provision for general aid for school children living at points distant from their schools.

"Candidate Landon talked last Thursday about taking his savings out of the hides of the politicians, but Governor Landon has been taking his savings, in part at least, out of the salaries of teachers and the schools of his State."

Governor Martin

"In view of our better circumstances, we here in Oregon feel that the burden of proof is upon Governor Landon. We see no reason for substituting something else for the New Deal. If he thinks we should, it is up to him to convince us. But I must confess there was nothing in his talk of last Thursday to give our citizenry the slightest reason for turning its back upon the present administration at Washington. As far as I can make out, the platform of the Republican nominee is offering the country a New Deal of his own in diluted form.

"In one breath the Governor condemned the use of Federal powers in regulating national economic problems and said that a return to the traditional pattern of States rights was absolutely essential. In the next breath Governor Landon pledged himself to a Federal farm relief program, a Federal system of social security and Federal relief for the unemployed.

"But I wish to make it emphatic that out here on the Pacific Coast there is no disposition to question the good faith or integrity of Governor Landon, but there certainly is a disposition to question the good faith of those who are supporting him for the Presidency.

"I have no doubt that Governor Landon is sincere in believing that he has succeeded in liberalizing the Republican party, that he has succeeded in doing what. Theodore Roosevelt and other great Americans failed to accomplish. Perhaps he has but to look who stands behind him. Whom do we see?

"Well, it is a well-known fact that the manipulators of Wall Street are 100 per cent behind Governor Landon's candidacy. They boast of the fact. Are they the new liberals? And supporting the Governor also we find Mr. Andrew Mellon, Mr. Ogden Mills, Mr. Joseph Grundy of Pennsylvania, Mr. Hearst, and the du Ponts, the great packers and the great financial interests, the oil men, and the bankers, are these the new liberals with whom Governor Landon is going forth so hopefully?

"I am afraid it is impossible for us to believe that the reactionary forces behind the Republican nominee and the Republican platform, the same Old Guard group that brought disaster to this country, are now ready to renounce their old ways, to reform the habits of a lifetime, and to swallow without blinking the reforms against which they have battled for a lifetime."

Large Drop In Cancer Death Rate Possible

Memorial Hospital for the Treatment of Cancer and Allied Diseases to build and equip a new institution, a great cancer center, is an encouraging sign in the relentless battle against one of the oldest diseases. This gift will make possible not only more treatment facilities, but more intensive study of the causes of cancer, a study which scientists and institutions in many parts of the world are patiently pursuing. The encouraging thing about cancer research is that, while hope of finding a single cure still is deferred, the multitude of organizations and men working at the problem never grow discouraged. Their interest and efforts do not lag. The more challenging the problem, the more doggedly they appear to study it.

Disease Has Many Causes

It is considered doubtful whether the discovery of the causes of cure of cancer will ever come in a moment, or as a flash of inspiration. Cancer is not one disease, but many, with numerous manifestations and types. There is probably no one cause, nor single cure. Knowledge which will increase control of this group of diseases probably will come as the result of long continued, laborious and exacting research such as is now being carried on in many institutions.

Motivating all research and effort in this field is the multitude of sufferers from cancer. It does not claim only the aged and infirm who have passed their period of greatest usefulness to their families and to the community. It strikes those in the full maturity of life—the mother just launching her sons and daughters into life, the statesman about to assume public office, the business man at the height of his success, or the working man with a growing family to maintain.

Contrary to the general belief, cancer and allied diseases are also rather common in children. Indeed certain tumors are more common among children than among adults. Many children have cancer unrecognized by their parents or family physician. While progress is being made in the earlier discovery and treatment of cancer among adults, less progress has been made among children. Parents and physicians in general practice are not sufficiently on the lookout for cancer symptoms in children. Cancer in children represents the last group to be reached by modern methods of diagnosis and treatment, and cancer mortality among them is higher than in any other age group.

Other Diseases Under Control

This generation has seen encouraging progress made in checking other diseases which formerly took a heavy toll in life and suffering. Smallpox has become a rarity among civilized people. The tuberculosis death rate has been cut in two in this country through better understanding of the causes and treatment of the disease and widespread educational and preventive effort. Progress has been made in understanding and curing mental disorders. Typhoid fever strikes only sporadically. Thousands and thousands of little children are safeguarded from diphtheria through toxin-antitoxin. A belated battle is on to treat and control venereal diseases—to get away from the squeamishness which has prevented frank facing of the facts about these very prevalent diseases. They are now being dealt with, as they should have been long ago, as a major public health problem.

Many persons stricken with cancer may be saved, especially if discovered and treated promptly. Cancer hospitals and societies advise the public to suspect every persistent irritation, for cancer is stimulated by the prolonged irritation of the tissues in which it occurs. Avoid quacks and consult a reputable physician, and preferably a specialist in this field, they urge. If there is not a family physician or a specialist available, go to the nearest clinic or hospital.

In the files of one New York hospital is the dramatic story of a man who might serve as a universal illustration of the importance of early discovery and diagnoisis. This man was in the heart of Africa when he was stricken with a throat irritation, slight, not even painful, but it did not subside. He did not delay, but he flew, literally, to get help. A week's airplane trip brought him to a seaport and then a fast steamer carried him to New York. In thirteen days from Central Africa he was in a hospital and under treatment. To day he is alive and attending to his business.

Amid the encircling gloom that has hovered over cancer through the ages there is coming a realization that it can be successfully combatted only by facing the facts, and by patients, institutions, physicians and scientists all doing their part. There can be no question but that, as a great authority has recently pointed out, cancer is the most urgent and fruitful field of humanitarian effort today.

The Entire Class

King Edward is reported engaged to the Princess Frederica Louise Thyra Victonia Margerita Sophia Olga Cecilia Isabella Christa. The King can do as he likes, but if I married a girl with all those names I'd feel as though I'd wedded the graduating class of Wellesley or Vassar.—Chicago Tribune.

Soviet Speeds Up Consumers' Goods

Attempts To Catch Up With People's Needs Despite Rush Of Arms Production

The Soviet Government is increasing pressure on light industry factories to try to catch up with the people's needs. As a matter of fact, production of such goods is higher now than ever before in Russia.

It is officially announced that turnover in consumers' goods for the first six months of this year was 28 per cent above the same period last year, totaling 50,000,000,000 rubles, according to the New York Times. Percentages of increase for certain commodities are announced as follows:

Cotton fabrics, 31 per cent; woollen fabrics, 44 per cent; silk fabrics, 78 per cent; linen fabrics, 267 per cent; sugar, 67 per cent; vegetable oil, 53 per cent; butter, 23 per cent; eggs, 223 per cent; canned goods, 46 per cent, and meat products, 15 per cent.

Yet, even with these increases, the amount of goods available is far below the people's wants and needs. This is the reason the queue, once so characteristic of Soviet life, still recurs from time to time, seldom for food now, but for such things as shoes and textiles.

Queue Forms at 1 A. M.

For example, one Moscow store has now begun selling shoes of a good model. A line of would-be purchasers begins forming at 1 o'clock in the morning. Some persons in the line of course are speculators.

Soviet officials admit that inadequacy of production is only one factor in the shortage. The machinery of distribution, burdened with bureaucracy and lacking in the spur of private profit, still creaks and all too frequently breaks down. Goods too often are distributed arbitrarily, according to a fixed plan, by functionaries more interested in making a good record of turnover than in filling the actual needs of the people.

This maldistribution shows itself especially in the lack of seasonal goods. For instance, your correspondent recently combed Moscow for electric fans, which the Soviet now makes. Not one was to be found, but in the midst of a heat wave stores displayed a profusion of electric heaters.

Distribution is uneven. A few big stores will get the bulk of some product, while others will get little or none. Villages are still poorly supplied despite the government's pressure to remedy that defect.

The government is conducting missionary work in stores to speed up selling and eradicate the indifference and sometimes insolence with which clerks often treat customers. This is proving very effective. In many Soviet stores one now finds clerks who in agreeableness and helpfulness would do credit to any American store.

War Needs Curb Production

There is no doubt that the Russian people by now would be infinitely better supplied at far lower prices but for the Kremlin's anxiety over the war danger. Certainly, the Soviet's rulers would like to satisfy the people's needs; but, straining as it is to make the country militarily invincible, it must devote money, energy and facilities to defense that otherwise could go to the people's comfort. And so shortages are always developing, even in the simplest products.

Recently a noted Soviet journalist, called on Joseph Stalin at the Kremlin for a conference. Stalin, who, like other Kremlin leaders, insists that callers be well groomed, noticed a button off the journalist's shirt and, pointing to it, said banteringly:

"So you call yourself a cultured man."

"Iosif Vissarionovich," said the journalist, using the Russian form of address, "it is easier to buy a tractor than to buy a button."

Today the government ordered the button industry to speed up and improve quality.

Prison sentences ranging up to ten years are being passed on speculators in a serious campaign to eliminate these last pale, petty ghosts of the old NEP (five-year plan.) These speculators, taking advantage of the chronic shortage of consumers' goods, buy up goods as they come into the market and then peddle them at profiteering prices.

There have been scores of arrests for this offense in the past few days in Leningrad and Moscow, and it is understood a general round-up is being made at many other places.

A typical case is that of a Moscow woman who bought shoes for 80 rubles at a store and then sold them for 100 rubles. She got a five-year sentence.

One man confessed purchasing 5,000 meters of cloth in Leningrad, which is well supplied, and shipping it to Kiev, where he sold it at high prices.

Speculators are operating in a wide variety of "deficit goods," such as ready-made clothing, blankets, toys, dolls and, especially, shoes and textiles. x

Puerto Rican Leader, 7 Aides Convicted Of Plot Against Govt.

Pedro Albizu Campos, leader of the Puerto Rican Nationalists, and seven followers were sentenced on July 31 to terms of two to six years in prison following their conviction on charges of conspiring to overthrow the Government of the United States.

The sentencing of the Nationalists by Judge Robert A. Cooper in United States District Court at San Juan, Puerto Rico, displaced in public interest the Spanish revolt, but there were no demonstrations other than the applauding of the prisoners as they were taken to La Princessa prison.

Party Officers in Group

In addition to Albizu, the prisoners are Lius Velazquez, treasurer of the Nationalist party; Juan Antonio Corretjer, general secretary; Julio Velazquez, Joan Gallardo, Santiago, Clemente Soto Velez, Erasmo Velazquez and Pablo Rosado Ortiz, says the New York Times.

The Nationalists plan to fight the conviction. Gilberto Conception and Jose Toro Nazario, their counsel, conferred with Albiz in jail this afternoon. Later they said they would renew their efforts for a new trial, following that with an appeal if a retrial is denied.

Policemen and other guards continued that day to patrol the homes of the jurors at the trial.

Albizu was said to be bitter because of District Attorney Snyder's reference to him as "an assassin and Judge Cooper's remarks in passing sentence. The judge said, addressing Albizu:

Leader Blamed by Judge

"Candor and frankness compel me to say that I regard you as primarily responsible for what has happened leading up to this case. I think yours was the major responsibility. This is regrettable because of the opportunities which you have had.

"You may not agree, but my deliberate judgment is that the blood of some of your own faithful followers is on your hands, due to your ill-timed, ill-considered and inflammatory remarks."

A "monster reception" for United States Representative Vito Marcantonio of New York, who was scheduled to arrive there the next day was announced by Nationalists. They asserted he would aid the Nationalists in an address from the balcony of the Alcaldia on the plaza immediately after his arrival.

of earth was built up.

In the course of extending the dike into the water from two opposite sides, as many as a thousand men at a time jumped on the kaoliang stalks to tramp them down into a compact mass. When the two ends of the dike approached to within 100 feet and the river had dug out its bed with a swift-running 30-foot-deep current, long willow facing "sausages" weighing four tons each and filled with rock were rolled into the remaining opening till the gap was closed, after which bags of earth were piled in front of the willow and stone work to seal it and make it watertight according to ancient methods.

Revolt In Spain Born Of Lenient '31 Uprising

wealth. There were Jesuit banks and Jesuit-controlled railroads, and the richest mines in the Asturias were owned by that order. Moreover, these vast properties were exempt from taxation. In a word, the church was an entirely different church from that which exists in France, England and the United States. It was part of the feudal system of the time of Ferdinand and Isabella.

So the Spanish republic came in response to the Spanish people's demand for a new deal—for a democratic new deal. And the young republic passed laws to increase the pitifully small earnings of the peasants, to divide some of the largest estates, to provide that religious property should be taxed as well as other property, and to build schools and fight illiteracy.

Of course, this aroused the enmity and resentment of the old privileged classes.

In October, 1934, several American correspondents went into Spain—to dodge bullets in the streets of San Sebastian and Madrid. Over in the Asturias hundreds of workers and miners were being shot down because they believed—and rightly believed—that the government was under the control of the Right Wing conservatives and the monarchists. They knew that the liberal democracy, which promised them a fairer chance in life, was being undermined—that the liberties they had won in 1931 were fast being taken away from them. But the army chiefs were against them—the rebellion to save the republic hadn't been properly organized throughout the rest of Spain. Three thousand Republicans were mowed down—and the real civil war in Spain was merely postponed.

Two Plot Leaders

Two men were chiefly responsible for defeat of the republic in October, 1934. One of them was General Francisco Franco, the leader of the present rebellion. The other was Jose Gil Robles, young and uncompromising chief of the Catholic Popular Action party. Gil Robles was the champion of the clericals of Spain, an avowed enemy of the republic. He headed a Right Wing minority party, and was extraordinarily shrewd in politics.

General Franco was an old-school army officer, and probably the best strategist in Spain. Today, at forty-five, he is recognized as the strongest and the hardest general in the army. During the October revolt Franco was the right-hand man of the Minister of War. He gave orders to clean up the Asturias—and they were cleaned up with dispatch and without mercy. It is no accident that these two men are the brains behind the Spanish rebels today.

Thanks to the split among the Radical Socialists, the Socialists and the other Republican parties, the Right Wing conservative managed to keep Spain in their control from the autumn of 1934 until last February's elections. They could stay in and undo the reforms of the republic as long as no elections were held. If they could control the elections, and Spanish elections have been run on a super-Tammany basis for generations, they would be able to kill the republic by degrees. But in February the people of Spain had another revolution—this time in the ballot box. They swept the 100 per cent Republicans back into office—and they whittled the monarchist deputies of Gil Robles down to an impotent minority. Immediately there were rumors in Spain that a military coup d'etat would be attempted.

The new government shifted many suspected army officers to new posts—and they sent General Franco about as far away as they could, to be Governor of the Canary Islands. He knew that the Republican rebellion of 1934 had been suppressed by troops from the Spanish Legion in Morocco, many of them native troops who would not refuse to take marching orders from officers who were royalists and anti-Republican.

Seized Morocco

Accordingly, Franco entered into a plot to seize control of Spanish Morocco—aided largely by native soldiers under monarchist officers—and to synchronize this with uprisings in southern Spain, particularly by gaining control of the key garrison at Seville. This is what has happened over the week end—and this is why today's civil war is the greatest menace that the Spanish republic has yet confronted.

Most of the foreign correspondents in Spain believe that the first great mistake of the republic was committed during the original revolution in 1931. They say that the Spanish revolution risked its future existence by being too kind. Like the Russian revolution, Spain had to break with 600 years of an autocratic feudal system. Unlike the Russians, the Spaniards treated the leaders and beneficiaries of the old regime with amazing gentleness. Not even twenty were killed in the Spanish revolution.

They Were Kind

The Republicans appropriated the land of a few extravagantly rich grandees, but they did not take possession of a fraction of the land. They tried to lift Spain from the sixteenth into the twentieth century without hurting anybody's feelings. As a result, observers in Spain have insisted, the real Spanish revolution was postponed. The republic was not safe because it refused to crush the powerful forces opposed to it. That, I think, is an accurate and fair conclusion. It may not sound humanitarian—but neither the French nor the American Revolutions were able to create our two great democracies by being gentle to their opponents.

4 Countries Back Atlantic Airmail

Britain Announces Accord With Canada, The Irish Free State And Newfoundland

A North Atlantic mail and passenger air service agreement between Great Britain, Canada, the Irish Free State and Newfoundland was announced in the House of Commons on July 30 by Sir Philip Sassoon, Britain's Under-Secretary for Air.

The agreement was concluded in consultation with the United States Government to assure the fullest measure of understanding and cooperation, according to the New York Times, whose London despatch of July 30 continues: The result was that the understanding reached was based on the principle of full reciprocity which it is hoped will bring about as soon as practicable the establishment of a transatlantic air service connecting the countries concerned.

The main points of the agreement follow:

A joint operating company will be incorporated at the instance of three companies, one nominated by Great Britain, one by the Irish Free State and one by Canada. The company nominated by Britain will be the Imperial Airways. The capital of the joint company, to be subscribed, will be held as follows: Fifty-one per cent by the British company, 24½ per cent each by the Canadian and Irish Free State companies.

Exchange of Landing Fields

Landing facilities will be granted to the joint company by the United States and Pan American Airwavs will obtain landing facilities from the governments of Britain, Canada, Irish Free State and New foundland and participate on a basis of reciprocity with the joint company in the operation of the services.

All practical preference will be given to a direct route between Britain and Canada via the Irish Free State and Newfoundland, but it may be necessary during the initial period to operate the services via Bermuda in the Winter.

Experimental long-distance flights and other necessary investigations will be carried out soon. The incorporation of the joint company will involve some delay, so the experimental flights and investigations will be made by Imperial Airways and the results will be placed at the disposal of the joint company. It is understood Pan American Airways also will make experimental flights.

Control over commercial, technical and operating matters will be secured to Imperial Airways through its stockholding and the articles of association of the joint company subject to the superior jurisdiction of the board of directors in questions of major policy.

During the experimental stage the flying operations will be financed by the British Government. When the joint company assumes responsibility it will receive an annual subsidy from the participating governments as follows: Canada, 20 per cent, up to a maximum of £75,000; Irish Free State, 5 per cent, up to a maximum of £12,000; Newfoundland, a sum to be agreed on between that government and Britain, and Britain will make up the rest.

Each of the four governments concerned has undertaken to arrange for the provision of necessary airport, radio and meteorological facilities. In connection with the general transfer of meteorological services to the new organization being developed in the Irish Free State, Britain will contribute £6,000 annually to the Free State.

Fifteen-Year Monopoly Planned

Each of the governments has undertaken to grant the necessary landing and transit rights within its own territory to the joint company and Pan American Airways. It is contemplated that, unless otherwise determined by the consent of the governments, such rights will be exclusive for transatlantic air services for fifteen years.

An intergovernmental committee on transatlantic air services will be established, consisting of four members appointed by the governments to which will be referred for approval decisions on the proposals of the joint company relating to transatlantic air services which may affect national policy or the relations of the governments concerned with other governments. All decisions of the intergovernmental committee must be reached unanimously.

Ethiopian Ex-Governor Is Guest Of Italy

Domei

ROME, August 21—Ras Gugsa, former Ethiopian provincial governor who went over to the Italian side in the course of the Fascist military campaign in East Africa, arrived at Naples this morning to start a tour of Italy as guest of the Rome Government. His travelling expenses are being paid by the Government in reward for his aid to the Italian expeditionary forces.

Kreisler's Income Tax

Domei

WASHINGTON,—Fritz Kreisler, the famous violinist, appealed against a $53,655 income tax deficiency assessment to the Board of Tax Appeals. He contended the Treasury had computed his taxable income erroneously.

The Treasury claimed Kreisler has received $114,130 from contracts in 1933—the year at issue—and in addition had received royalities and made profits from stock transactions.

Kreisler argued that he should have been allowed deductions for various expenses. In 1933 he paid a tax of $8,789 for 1933.

National Union Party Sweeps Canada Election

Domei

MONTREAL, August 18—A remarkable political landslide has occurred in Canada.

The Liberal Government which has been in power for 40 years in Quebec has been overwhelmed in the provincial elections by the National Union party, led by Mr. Maurice Duplessis.

The party consists of Conservatists and "rebel" Liberals.

The Premier of Quebec, Mr. A. Godbout, and several members of the provincial Cabinet have been defeated.

The latest returns show the following position:—

National Union Party	74
Liberals	14
Outstanding	2

Scouts Reducing Color Prejudice In South Africa

Lord Baden-Powell Sees Turn For Better In Intensity Of Feeling Prevailing

Hope that the color difficulty in South Africa might eventually be solved by the good work of the Boy Scouts was voiced by Lord Baden-Powell, Chief Scout, in an interview recently at London on his return from a seven months' tour in Africa, says the Christian Science Monitor.

People at home, said the Chief Scout, could not realize the intensity of feeling in the South African Union on the color question. It was true that it existed to some extent in other parts of the world, so that one found the colored boys and girls had their own patrols, though both colored and white would join the same parade.

Three Divisions

But now in South Africa he was glad to say that things showed signs of becoming better. His object on this African tour has been to establish the extension of Scouting to the native and colored races, and this had been accomplished.

The Council of the South African Branch of the Boy Scouts Association has agreed unanimously that there should be three non-European sections of the movement within the union, namely, Pathfinder (full native) Boy Scouts, Colored Scouts, and Indian Scouts, each to be a self-governing unit and under the controling authority of the Union Scout Council.

Leading Public Opinion

One leading churchman in South Africa went so far as to say that "the Scout Movement has given a lead to public opinion on the color question in accordance with Christian spirit and modern progress."

The natives, said Lord Baden-Powell, took to Scouting like ducks to water, and the difficulty was to get enough Scoutmasters to cope with the rush of boys who wanted to join. The good work done was already in evidence, for with the colored and native boys and girls, as with whites, Scouting and Guiding brought out character in them.

Thinking for Themselves

They were learning to think for themselves, whereas hitherto they had behaved as paid slaves. One result of this with girls was that they were accepting domestic service and becoming nursemaids and maid servants. During their years of Scout training, too, they learn handicrafts which could only add to their value.

During his tour, Lord Baden-Powell said that he had come across about 16 native races who had adopted Scouting. Some of these in the Sudan and Uganda, for instance, had only recently emerged from savagery, and he had had a good opportunity of seeing what a beneficial effect the introduction of Scouting was having. It made a tremendous appeal to the native mind and white settlers said that its influence was most marked.

Next Jamboree

At the present time in the Union of South Africa there were about 14,000 white Scouts and Guides and about 10,000 colored, though, as already stated, the latter are expected to increase greatly as trained Scoutmasters become available.

Asked as to his future activities, the Chief Scout said things were already getting busy for the next world jamboree which would take place in the Netherlands in 1937. The camp will be at Vogelensang, Bloemendaal, about 10 miles from Amsterdam, from July 31 to Aug. 13. It is hoped to gather about 30,000 Scouts from all over the world.

MICKEY ROONEY'S A VETERAN AT 15

At the age of fifteen, Mickey Rooney has fourteen years of acting experience to his credit. He made his stage debut with his parents' vaudeville act when he was eleven months old, and even before that he had been traveling with the troupe.

Mickey's parents were playing in Brooklyn when he was born. Eleven days later the family entrained for Albany to play an engagement there. When he was two Mickey was made a regular member of the act. At four he was in New York with Will Morrissey's revue when a Hollywood studio executive spotted him.

In his first two picture he played a midget. These were "Not To Be Trusted" and "Orchids and Ermine." He has since appeared in "Manhattan Melodrama," "Chained," "Blind Date," "Hideout," "Big-Hearted Herbert," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Rendezvous," "Ah Wilderness" and "Riff Raff," and makes his latest appearance in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," Selznick-International's production of the world famous story by Frances Hodgson Burnett.

COLUMBIA SIGNS POLLY MORAN

Polly Moran, who was "Two-Gun Nell" in those early comedies long before there was a Hollywood, has entered another phase of her remarkable career as a comedienne. She has been signed to a long-term contract by Columbia Pictures which calls for her to be starred in a series of two-reel comedies.

Miss Moran, who with the late Marie Dressler, formed one of the greatest comedy teams the screen has ever known, has been playing these comedy roles for many decades. The short feature in which she has appeared are too numerous to mention. A few of the many full-length productions in which she also had featured roles were, "Callahans and the Murphys," "Bringing Up Father," "Shadows of the Night," "Dangerous Females," "Chasing Rainbows," "Prosperity," "Alice in Wonderland," and "Hollywood Party."

Toledo's Great Fortress-Castle Again Attacked

Alcazar Used As Stronghold By Moors, Romans And Ancient Iberians

Toledo's great fortress-castle, the Alcazar, has once again felt the attack of armed forces. Spanish insurgents barricaded in the square, towered building which dominates the heights above the city, recently surrendered to government troops manning tanks, armored cars and bombing planes.

"Burned, bombarded, rebuilt and restored many times, the Alcazar belongs to history rather than to any one period," says a recent bulletin from the Washington, D.C., headquarters of the National Georgraphic Society. "The first building of any description on the site of the Alcazar was probably a fort of an ancient Iberian tribe. Later, when Rome's legions swept across the peninsula, they built a strong 'castellum' on the site of the crude fort; it was later used by the Visigoths as their own citadel when they established their capital at Toledo.

Residence of Famous Cid

"Next used by the Moors as a fortress, it was captured in the eleventh century by Spanish forces under the leadership of Alfonso VI and the Cid, Spain's hero of fact and fiction, who made it his official residence. It was afterwards enlarged successively by John II, Ferdinand and Isabella, Charles V and Philip II. Since 1882 the Alcazar has been the home of the Spanish Military Academy.

"Although only 47 miles southwest of Madrid, Toledo is centuries removed from the modern capital of Spain. Actually, few modern improvements have been introduced since Philip II moved the capital to Madrid more than 350 years ago. Narrow, twisting streets, shaded by tall, shuttered houses are seldom frequented by modern vehicles, and the bray of some sturdy little burro is neither an unusual nor an infrequent sound. Toledo is, in appearance and atmosphere, a distinctly oriental city. Perfect examples of Moorish art and architecture abound in the city.

"The swift Tagus River, whose rocky gorge forms a natural moat on three sides of Toledo, is spanned at the eastern edge of the city by the Alcantara. Although the ancient bridge is undoubtedly Moorish in origin, the upper parts were constructed during the reigns of the Christian kings.

Cervantes Lived There

"The hub of activity for Toledo's 20,000 inhabitants is the Plaza de Zocodover, a three-sided 'square' tucked away in the northeast corner of the city. It is the scene of a weekly market which is essentially the same today as it was in the days when Spain's beloved Cervantes lived and wrote in a small inn scarcely a stone's throw from the Zocodover. A bust of the creator of Don Quixote, seedy knight of fiction who dealt the death-blow to Spanish feudalism, marks the old inn which is one of the city's chief points of interest.

"Equally dear to the hearts of the Spanish people is a contemporary of Cervantes—Domenico Theotocopouli, better known as El Greco, one of Spain's most famous masters. Although born in Crete, the painter thoroughly embodied the spirit and traditions of Toledo, his adopted city. Casa del Greco, his home for many years, has been delightfully restored.

"In the heart of the city rises a beautiful French-Gothic cathedral, unrivalled in Spain for its collection of artistic masterpieces. Because it is hemmed in on three sides by houses, it is impossible to get an adequate idea of its beauty and size. Begun by medieval craftsmen in 1227, the cathedral was completed 226 years later. It is the seat of the Metropolitan Archbishop, the ranking church official of Spain.

Hebrew Culture Center

Among Toledo's chief points of interest is the Church of San Juan de los Reyes, started in 1476 under Ferdinand and Isabella's direction, and intended by them to be their tomb. Just southeast of the church lies the old Jewish quarter. Toledo was for many centuries one of the strongholds of Jewish activity and a center of Hebrew culture.

"Except for the small but highly developed industry dealing with the manufacture of artistic metal pieces, commercial and industrial activity is today at a virtual standstill in Toledo. At the height of its prosperity during the four centuries of Moorish occupation, Toledo was one of Europe's largest and wealthiest cities, with more than 200,000 inhabitants. It was an important trade center for silk, wool and Toledo blades.

"After its capture by Alfonso VI's forces in 1085, Toledo was the capital of Christian Spain for almost five centuries all that now remains as an outward symbol of its days of glory is its importance as a center of religious power. For this reason it has long been called the 'Rome of Spain.'"

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Man Without Fingerprints

Raymond Mount, a North American citizen, at present residing in Buenos Aires, Argentine, was unable to obtain a card of identity, as is obligatory for all alien residents of that South American country. When Mr. Mount called at the office of Police Headquarters, it was found that his fingers lacked the lines and whorls, which constitute the fingerprints of every living human. It was the first time in the history of the Argentine police that any applicant presented this strange phenomenon. Although it is mandatory to have the fingerprints of an alien resident affixed to his card of identity Mr. Mount was relieved of this obligation.

It would seem that the lack of fingerprints is hereditary in the Mount family, because his Mother and 3 brothers have the same curious deficiency.

Landon Clarifies Stand On Labor

Unions Have Right To Organize A Whole Industry, He Writes To Norman Thomas

Governor Alfred Landon of Texas made public on July 30 a letter to Norman Thomas, Socialist nominee for President, in which the Governor amplified the declaration of his labor policy made in his acceptance speech by saying that the right of labor to organize necessarily included the right of a labor union to promote by lawful and proper means the organization of an unorganized industry, with the right to send in an organizer.

In this letter, which was in reply to one from Mr. Thomas, the Republican Presidential candidate also replied indirectly to recent criticism made by Major George L. Berry, president of Labor's Non-Partisan League, that in 1935 Governor Landon had sent State troops into Southeastern Kansas, during a strike of the mine, mill and smelter works union, says James A. Hagerty in the New York Times. His Topeka despatch of July 30 continues:

Major Berry charged that the Governor sent the troops at the request of the mine owners, enabling the owners, with troops on guard, to reopen the lead mine with non-union labor.

Question Raised by Thomas

Mr. Thomas's letter asked Governor Landon if the latter's assertion in his acceptance speech that employes should be "free from coercion or intimidation by the employer, any fellow employe or any other person" did not mean a denial of the right of a labor union or labor unions actively to promote the organization of factory workers.
